

I made this work a couple of years ago after I became aware of AGL's plans. I remember my amazement when I first discovered the shoreline of Crib Point, finding something that felt so pristine and remote so close to Melbourne.

This image of a dislodged plant fragment from the coast directly adjacent to the proposed AGL gas boat is striding forward but burdened by a head bubble of pollution, as every living thing in Westernport Bay and out into Bass Strait would be contaminated by this floating industrial complex.
