The New Frontier Hotel Las Vegas

The New Frontier is an old, worn out hotel and casino located in Paradise, Nevada at the western edge of the Las Vegas Strip. It was also the second hotel to open on the Las Vegas strip and operated continuously in both Las Vegas and Hendersonville, TN since October 30, 1942. On July 16, 2020, it was demolished for good. The hotel was built in the middle of a huge field in an attempt to make the location convenient for guests. Unfortunately, the location was too far from town for the hotel's convenience and so they began to look for a new location. In order to take advantage of the location, they decided to take their business to the West Coast, opening a new location in Phoenix, Arizona.

The New Frontier did well at its first location, although it had trouble with the traffic and the high costs. Eventually it was no longer profitable enough to continue operating the operation, and the last day of operations for the hotel was on August 1, 2020. The casino that was built for the New Frontier in Hendersonville, Tennessee never paid off, and soon it was shut down, as well. On July 15, 2020, the casino and the original hotel were put up for sale, and they are expected to be sold in the next couple months. Although it was originally built in the middle of a field, the New Frontier has enjoyed great success since its closure.

The New Frontier has not only been a popular hotel for tourists in Las Vegas, but it has also been popular for many years in Hendersonville. It also has locations all over the country, although the most recent hotel was closed in 2020. The hotel was not damaged by Hurricane Rita, and its location was not affected by the storms. The New Frontier opened a new location in Tucson, Arizona shortly after the storm, and has been doing well there ever since.
