«Body positivity» is mostly associated with normalizing body types «bigger» than what's usually shown in movies/ads and on social media. Which is very important! But to me it also means that we can all contribute with the body we have by showing the reality, and not pretending we look flawless all the time. No matter how fit or skinny someone is they will probably have some insecurities, and that's what I think we should stop hiding and start normalizing! I can't believe it took me years to actually see someone with belly rolls on instagram or hot girls in TV shows with smaller breasts. And just seeing ONE person rocking those features I was self-conscious about made me feel so much better about myself.
