What is Adaptive Clothing?

Adaptive clothing is apparel that has been designed for people who have difficulties dressing themselves due to age, disability or general lack of mobility. Common misconceptions of adaptive clothing is that it is only for people who are bound to a wheelchair, however anyone who is limited by traditional clothing can benefit from adaptive clothing.

Many seniors appreciate the ease and comfort that adaptive clothing can offer, such as open back tops, extra wide slippers, easy snap pants, and wrap-around skirts and dresses for women.

Open back tops are applied using snaps at the shoulder. This style still provides coverage like an average shirt but it is much easier to put on and take off. Caregivers also love this style as it provides an easier changing experience as the individual being changed does not need to raise their arms.

Open back pants are cut out at the back to provide an easier changing experience. They have a modesty flap to provide coverage. They easily fasten with 3 snaps and allow for some sizing adjustment. Open back pants grant caregivers the ability to change or toilet someone in a standing or laying position.

Dignity suits, also known as anti-strip suits, are primarily used with individuals who have Alzheimer's or dementia. These suits are used to prevent inappropriate undressing. They are done up using snap closures at the back neckline and a full length zipper, making it harder for the person wearing the suit to take it off unassisted.

Men's & Women's Dignity Suits for Day and Night

Dignity suits are meant for those with conditions, such as Alzheimer's or Dementia, that make an individual spontaneously undress. To prevent undressing, these suits have snaps and zippers at the back of the suit to keep them out of reach of the person wearing it. This allows the person to stay safe and comfortable day and night. These suits are made of durable materials, with colours and patterns that change seasonally.
