CONVENTIONAL PRODUCTS VS. PRODUCTS WITH DERMATOPOIETIN®

Dermatopietin® is a polypeptide fully equivalent to the human natural factor interleukin-1a. This factor (cytokine) plays an important role for the maintenance of the structural and functional integrity of skin.

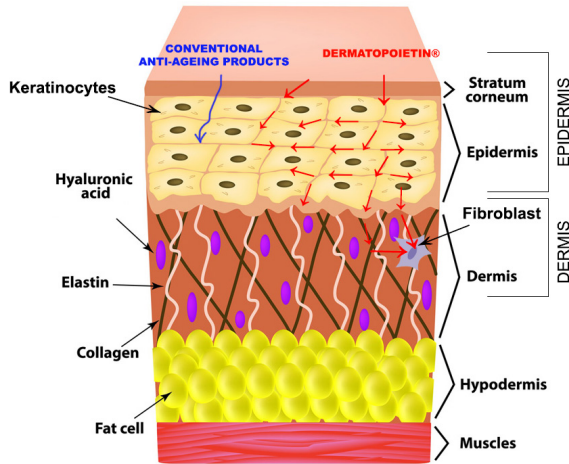

Dermatopietin® as an active cosmetic ingredient does not itself penetrate skin. It acts by a signaling mechanism from the surface of skin by activating a cascade of reactions that penetrate deep into the skin. The result is among others a strong increase of collagen, elastin and hyaluronic acid in the dermis (90% increase).

Dermatopietin mechanism of action and anti-aging effects

- Dermatopietin® activates on the surface of skin (without penetration) a cascade of reactions that propagate deep into the skin. It increase massively the production of Elastin, Collagen and Hyaluronic Acid in few days only.
- Dermatopietin® stimulates keratinocytes to release interleukin-1a which activates fibroblasts to initiate a skin renewal program.
- This skin renewal program affects both the dermis and epidermis.
- The anti-aging action of Dermatopietin® is thus triggered on the surface but comprises the entire skin.
- Clinical tests showed an increase of collagen, elastin and hyaluronic acid up to 90% within 2 weeks.
- Reference Studies: <https://evenswiss.ch/en/our-laboratory>
- The structural and functional effects of Dermatopietin® translate into an improved skin barrier, a better immune defense as well as a rejuvenated and smoother appearance of skin.

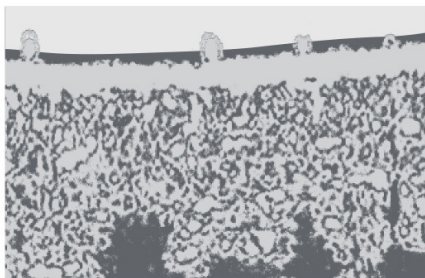

Limitations of conventional anti-aging products

- Poor penetration of the skin barrier.
- Little impact, if any, on the deeper layers of skin (dermis).
- Penetration enhancers, often used with conventional products, facilitate penetration also of pollutants and microorganisms.

Collagen, Elastin and Hyaluronic acid, provides the skin with firmness and elasticity.

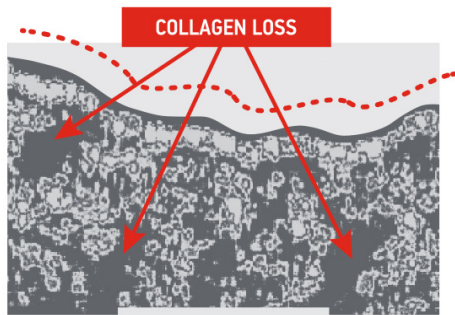

20 - year old reference skin

Young Skin

More than 90% of young skin (dry weight) is made up of collagen. Collagen forms, together with elastin, a well-organized network which provides the skin with structural support and the environment for vital cell functions.

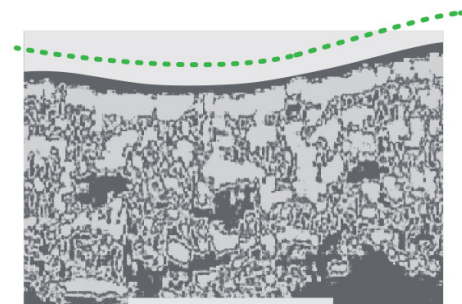

53 - year old reference skin

BEFORE

Aging Skin

With increasing age the skin loses its ability to produce functional collagen which is replaced by fat and proteoglycan deposits leading to a rough skin surface and/or the typical signs of skin aging.

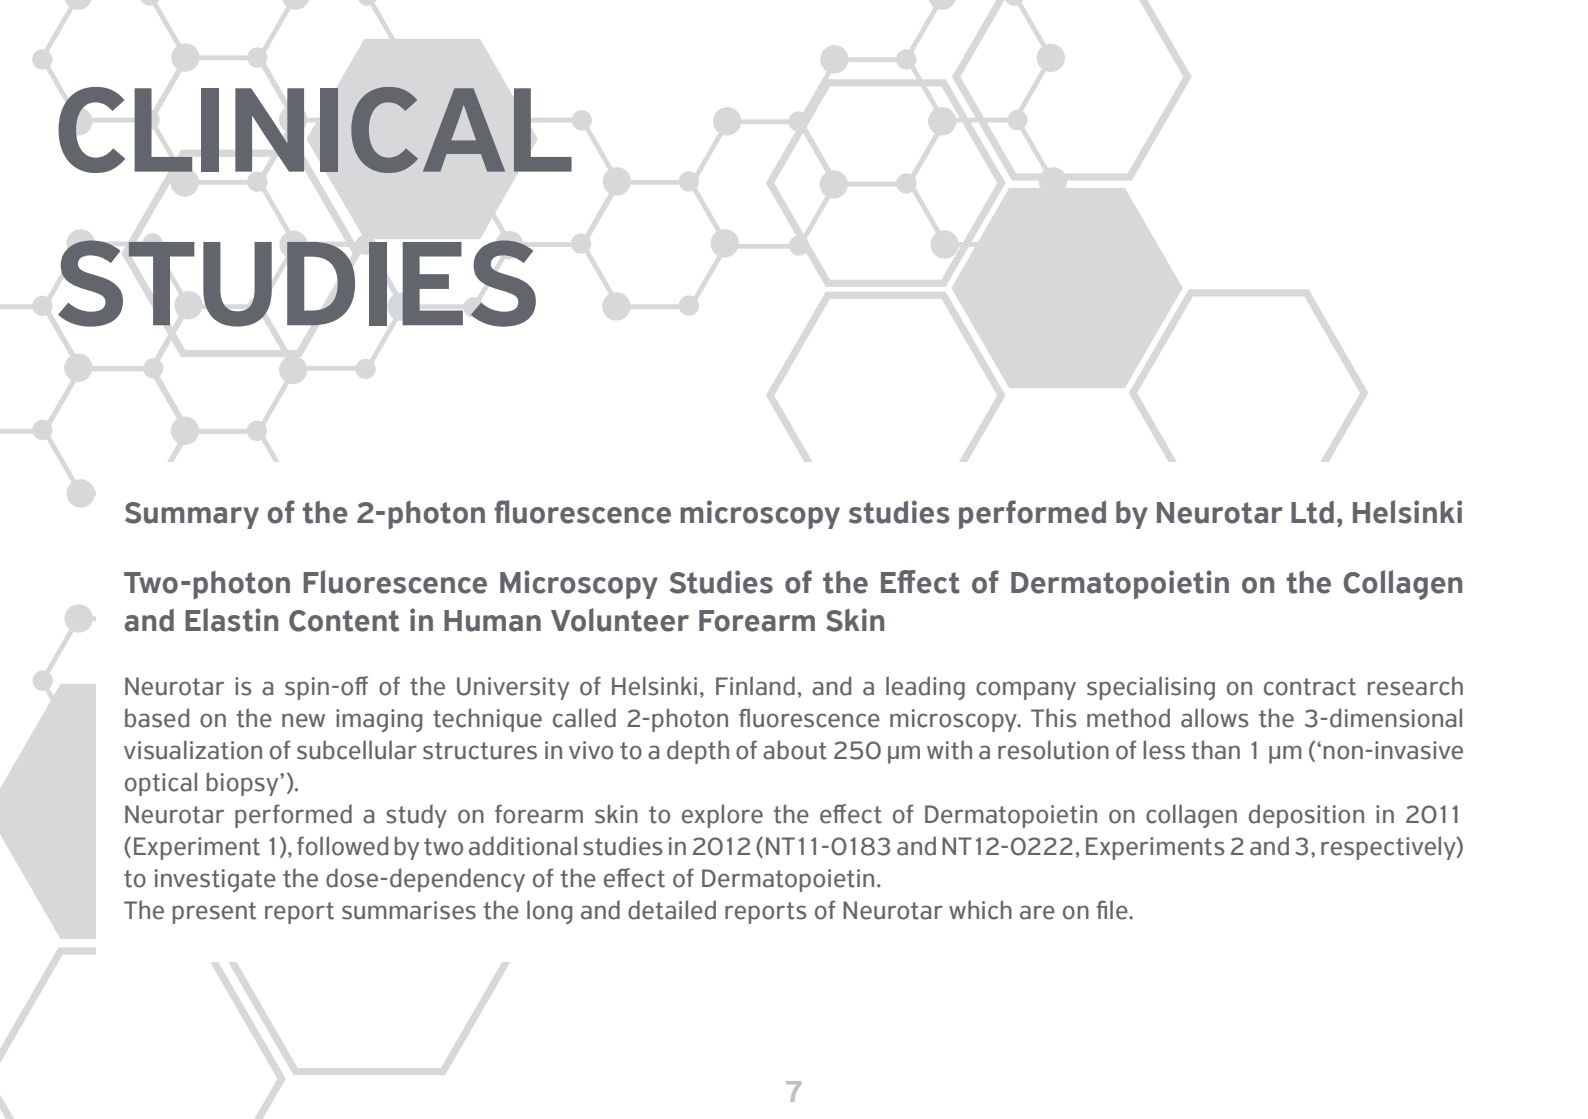

AFTER TREATMENT

Dermatopietin®

Approach to Rejuvenation of Aging Skin

By replenishing collagen and improving its function in the dermis Dermatopietin® reduces the signs of aging skin and restores its youthful appearance.

CLINICAL STUDIES

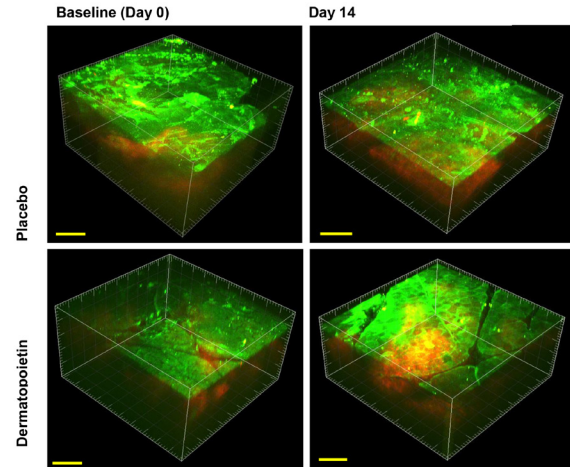

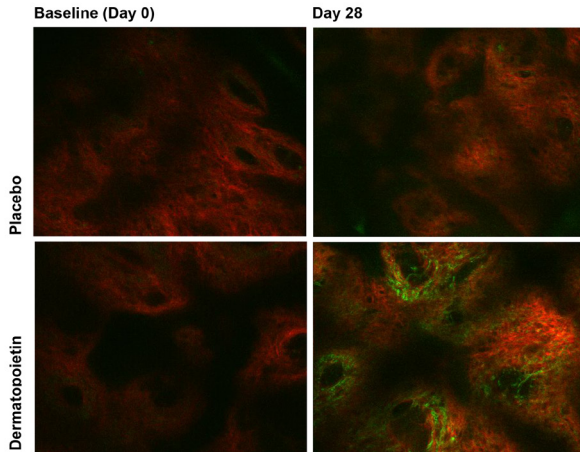

Summary of the 2-photon fluorescence microscopy studies performed by Neurotar Ltd, Helsinki

Two-photon Fluorescence Microscopy Studies of the Effect of Dermatopietin on the Collagen and Elastin Content in Human Volunteer Forearm Skin

Neurotar is a spin-off of the University of Helsinki, Finland, and a leading company specialising on contract research based on the new imaging technique called 2-photon fluorescence microscopy. This method allows the 3-dimensional visualization of subcellular structures in vivo to a depth of about 250 μm with a resolution of less than 1 μm ('non-invasive optical biopsy').

Neurotar performed a study on forearm skin to explore the effect of Dermatopietin on collagen deposition in 2011 (Experiment 1), followed by two additional studies in 2012 (NT11-O183 and NT12-O222, Experiments 2 and 3, respectively) to investigate the dose-dependency of the effect of Dermatopietin.

The present report summarises the long and detailed reports of Neurotar which are on file.

Experiment 1

Two-photon microscopic pictures from the dermis at 80 μm skin depth. Comparison of Dermatopoietin versus Placebo and Baseline versus 4-week treatment. Pictures were obtained from the same skin spot. Clearly visible is the increase of collagen (red) and elastin (green). Dermatopoietin concentration: 150 $\mu\text{g/L}$.

Experiment 2

Three-dimensional 2-photon microscopic composite pictures showing the green autofluorescence in the epidermis and dermis as well as collagen (red, second harmonic generation) in the dermis. Clearly visible is the increase of collagen after two weeks in the skin of the forearm treated with Dermatopoietin at a concentration of 30 $\mu\text{g/L}$.

DO NOT MIX

Mixing actives may not be the best course of action if they aren't already compounded in one product. Active ingredients are what make a product effective – everything else, whether it's an oil, cream or gel formulation, is a vehicle to deliver the active. The problem with mixing the wrong ones is that they can turn into potential irritants and cause an allergic reaction. But they can also cancel each other out, making them ineffective.

VITAMIN C + AHAS/BHAS

Vitamin C is effectively acid, so layering it with AHAs and BHAs is a big no-no. AHAs Alpha hydroxy acids (also called glycolic or lactic acids) are water-soluble and come from fruit and milk sugars; BHAs beta hydroxy acids, such as salicylic acid (aspirin), it is probably best known for its use as a key ingredient in topical anti-acne products, are oil-soluble, so they help to clean out clogged pores. Vitamin C it's also really unstable so any acids you layer it with will destabilize the pH balance and render it completely useless before it even has chance to work its magic.

RETINOL + AHAS/BHAS

Retinol doesn't exfoliate like AHAs and BHAs do, but it is a peeling agent so it does stimulate cell turnover to get rid of old and damaged skin cells. Mixing it with acids can cause dryness and irritation and damage the skin's moisture barrier.

RETINOL + VITAMIN C

Using retinol and Vitamin C together is yet another recipe for irritation, peeling, and redness. Together they'll also increase skin's sensitivity to the sun, meaning you're at a much higher risk of burning and UV damage.

Best practice is to use retinol at night and vitamin C by day.

OIL-BASED + WATER-BASED

It's basic high school-level science: oil and water don't mix. In fact, oil actually repels water, so when it comes to your skincare, using an oil-based product will leave a film on your skin which prevents water-based formulas from absorbing.

GLYCOLIC ACID + SALICYLIC ACID

Both ingredients work by removing dead skin cells from the outer layer of your skin, but more is not always better! Both are great ingredients used separately but mixing the two will cause a major reaction and strip your skin.

NIACINAMIDE + VITAMIN C

Used separately, both ingredients are great for treating blemish-prone and scarred skin but combining them is a recipe for disaster. Niacinamide cancels out all of the good properties of vitamin C and turns it into a substance that causes redness and can trigger acne breakouts.

Benzoyl Peroxide (BPO) and Retinols

Benzoyl Peroxide is a topical quick fix for skin conditions such as acne. When contact is made with the skin, it helps to weaken and reduce the number of acne-causing bacteria, ultimately drying your skin in the process. BPO can inactivate the retinoid effect.

GENERAL RECOMMENDATIONS

Antioxidant Serums and SPF

Adding an antioxidant serum that helps combat chemicals and bad beauty habits is a recipe for radiance. Antioxidant serums are a wonderful addition to our skincare regimen in the defense against ultraviolet radiation as well as environmental assaults, such as pollution. These are great to use in combination with sunscreens in order to enhance the skin's defense.

Pregnancy

During pregnancy and while breastfeeding hormonal luctuations impact skin function. Oil production often increases. Pigment-producing cells go into overdrive. In some cases, the skin becomes more easily inflamed, with worsening of skin conditions like eczema or psoriasis.

Thus, for our skincare products, systemic delivery of ingredients to the uterus and breast do not occur during pregnancy and lactation, we do not recommend our products during this period in order not to claim that the skin dysfunction was a reaction to our products except from:

Base Formula is recommended during the pregnancy in order to avoid the stretch marks.

Key ingredients:

Sweet almond oil has been used by pregnant women, as moisturizing oil for centuries. Almond oil moisturizes skin and increases flexibility and suppleness of skin. Application of this oil, daily, over stomach, thighs, breasts and other parts of the body that are prone to develop stretch marks can prevent their appearance.

Joboba oil is hypoallergenic so it can be used by anyone of any age and any skin type and is very beneficial for pregnant ladies.

Sunflower Seed oil: Sunflower seed oil has fatty acids, Vitamin B and E. Very nourishing and easily absorbed into the skin.

Recommendation for the order in the appliance

In the morning use first the product with Dermatopoietin® together with a booster than the sunscreen and end with a moisturizer if needed.

When you get home at the end of the day and are staying in for the night, wash your face and use one treatment (whether it's for brightening, minimizing pores or fighting acne), and then wash your face again before bed and do another treatment (preferably anti-aging). If you get home around five and go to bed at 11, that gives you six hours with one treatment and eight hours with another.

It's also not a good idea to mix sunscreen into foundation, as they could break down its effectiveness.

At the end of the day, common sense should reign when you're combining products. If you notice your skin is reacting adversely, slowly take products out of the mix to try to determine the irritant. And if all else fails, see a dermatologist who can help you establish a routine that will target your issues and get you back on the road to healthy skin.
