Latex

ENVIRONMENT FRIENDLY BRAND PHILOSOPHY : A GLIMPSE

Our 100 % natural, eco-friendly latex is derived from the rubber sap extracted from Hevea Brasiliensis rubber tree, which yields a milky white fluid that, usually also referred as latex.

It takes about six years for a Hevea Brasiliensis rubber tree to grow to a point where it's economical to harvest the sap, which is called latex.

The latex is a sticky, milky and white colloid drawn off by making incisions in the bark and collecting the fluid in vessels in a process called "tapping".

Here's how you tap one: The collector makes a thin, diagonal cut to remove a sliver of the bark. The milky-white latex fluid runs out of the bark, similar to bleeding out of a small superficial wound on your skin. The fluid runs down the cut and is collected in a bucket. After about six hours, the fluid stops flowing. In that six-hour period, a tree can usually fill a gallon bucket. The tree can be tapped again with another fresh cut, usually the next day.

Our 100% natural eco-friendly latex is manufactured with highly energy efficient Dunlop manufacturing method of producing Latex.

With our lush natural and organic Latex line of mattress, we thrive to reduce carbon imprint for a greener eco-friendly planet securing mother natures for generations to come.
