The ultimate in convenience and comfort.

If you've ever tried to push your kids across a beach or ball field in a traditional stroller, you know how big of a pain it is. Add in a few bags of stuff, and it quickly becomes an impossible task.

Enter the wagon stroller. It's a fairly new concept that's been gaining traction for the past year or two, and thankfully, they've only gotten better since their first inception. There are now a decent number of wagon strollers on the market, but it's important to know which features you should look for before you invest in one.

Stroller wagons (or wagon strollers, whichever you prefer) are a genius portmanteau of wagon and stroller. They offer comfy seating with belts and cushioning, as well as plenty of room to store your things. The great thing is that not only are they all double (or more) strollers — they're also equipped with the ability to glide over rough terrain without any problem, thanks to the fact that they can either be pushed or pulled. You'll find that it's easier to pull the wagon stroller over beach sand or up hills than it is to try and push a traditional stroller. Some wagon strollers even have footwells, adding an additional layer of comfort.

WHAT TO CONSIDER

With wagon strollers, there's a pretty wide variety of choices available, at a ton of price points. The main differences will be among seat styles, canopy styles, wheels, handles, load limits, and how much they cost. Stroller wagons with all the bells and whistles are not cheap, typically running upwards of $400. They're perfect for vacations, parks, camping, and activities where you'll be hobbling over multiple types of terrains. They're also especially great for boardwalk strolling. So, while their steep price tags might freak you out, we assure you they're worth it if your family is one for adventure.

The higher-end stroller wagons generally have rubber wheels and more durable fabrics. They typically have extra storage space and tons of cup holders. Sometimes, they even have a bar across the center for your kids to stash their cups and snacks. Their canopies are UPF-rated, which indicates how much UV radiation transmits through a piece of fabric, and they're usually fairly easy to open. Many of them even have car seat adapters, so you can put your baby on one side and your toddler on the other — making them ideal for growing families.

Less expensive stroller wagons might still have many of these features, but the materials won't be as plush, and they generally don't have the same durability or amount of storage.

The strollers on this list were selected because they represent a range of prices and styles. They're all highly rated, durable in relation to their cost, and very convenient. I have personally tried several wagon strollers on this list, and I can honestly say that they're a game-changing innovation that's genuinely worth the investment.

Deluxe Wrangler Stroller Wagon

Jeep

\$543 AT AMAZON

\$390 AT WALMART

Pros

- ✓ Great cargo space
- ✓ Remarkable sun protection

Cons

- ✗ Harder to collapse

- Maximum load: 110 pounds, 55 pounds per seat

You'll be able to trek through the heat or the cold thanks to this wagon stroller's fun additions. It's a wagon in the truest sense of the word, with a deep cavity that stores both stuff and children, as well as dual handles for pushing or pulling. While it doesn't have the leg well like the Evenflo, it's roomy enough for a comfortable ride.

The outside of the wagon has a wonderful cooler that does a solid job of keeping your food warm or cold, which is great for parents who are pumping or have bottles in tow. The addition of a car seat adapter makes this a fab choice for parents of toddlers and newborns alike.

Last but not least, this stroller wagon's unique roll-down shade feature is perfect for keeping cool on hot days, thanks to its UPF-rated shades.

Pros

- ✓ Inexpensive
- ✓ Easy to clean
- ✓ Tons of storage

Cons

- ✗ Not baby friendly

• Maximum Load: 110 pounds, 55 pounds per seat

Delta Children really got this stroller wagon right, and for the right price. It's easy to maneuver, and thanks to puncture-proof foam-filled wheels, you never need to worry about getting a flat tire.

It has tons of storage, a UV 50+ rated canopy, and retractable push-pull handles. The fabric is water and stain resistant, and can easily be hosed down and let to dry as needed.

While this doesn't have all of the bells and whistles of pricier models, I think that you'll find that this is still a solid choice in the stroller wagon category.
