Human Umbilical Mesenchymal Stem Cell Conditioned Media Extract?

Human Umbilical Mesenchymal Stem Cell Conditioned Media Extract?
Human Umbilical Mesenchymal Stem Cell Conditioned Media Extract is a culture supernatant secreted when culturing stem cells.
It refers to the clear fluid at the top when growing stem cells, which does not contain stem cells.

Culture supernatant is rich in growth factors and cytokines secreted from stem cells, which are proteins secreted by cells that control cell proliferation and differentiation, and are reported to play a very important role in restoring damaged tissue or cells.

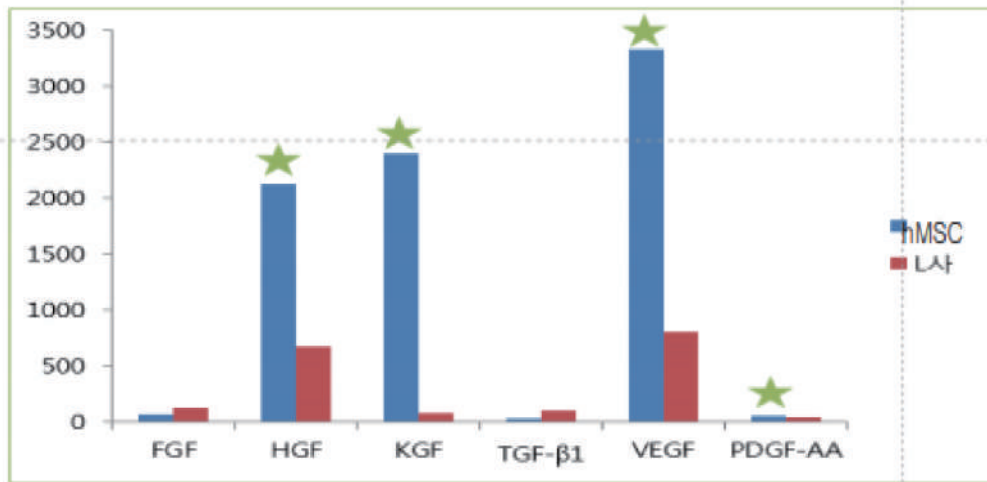

Umbilical Cord is rich in stem cells and has the ability to differentiate into various cells. For example, babies grow their bodies by making their own cells by getting stem cells from their mothers. With the same principle, high regeneration ability can be expected through various growth factors and cell function recovery.
