“Where’s my red toothbrush?” cried Ang Ku Kueh Girl as she searched high and low. It wasn’t in her dental mug where it was supposed to be. It wasn’t on the basin top. And, luckily, it wasn’t in the toilet bowl either.

The playground was Ang Ku Kueh Girl's favourite place in her neighbourhood on the Little Red Dot island. She knew there was something magical about it.

Soon, Ang Ku Kueh Girl, Ang Ku Kueh Boy and Red Egg were running around, playing catching and laughing.

Suddenly, they heard a loud “Ahem!”
It sounded like someone clearing his throat
because he had just woken up.

“Ah, finally, I can speak again,”
said a deep and kindly voice.

The three friends looked right.
Then, they looked left. They did not see anyone else in the playground.

Ang Ku Kueh Girl grabbed her brother and Red Egg, and pushed them in front of the Dragon before they could protest.

The Dragon took a deep breath, then blew on the sand in the playground.

A gust of wind and sand surrounded them. The sand felt magical.

She couldn't resist an adventure and the Dragon didn't look dangerous.

Before they knew it, they were shrinking. The wind blew them towards the red flowers that gave the island its name.

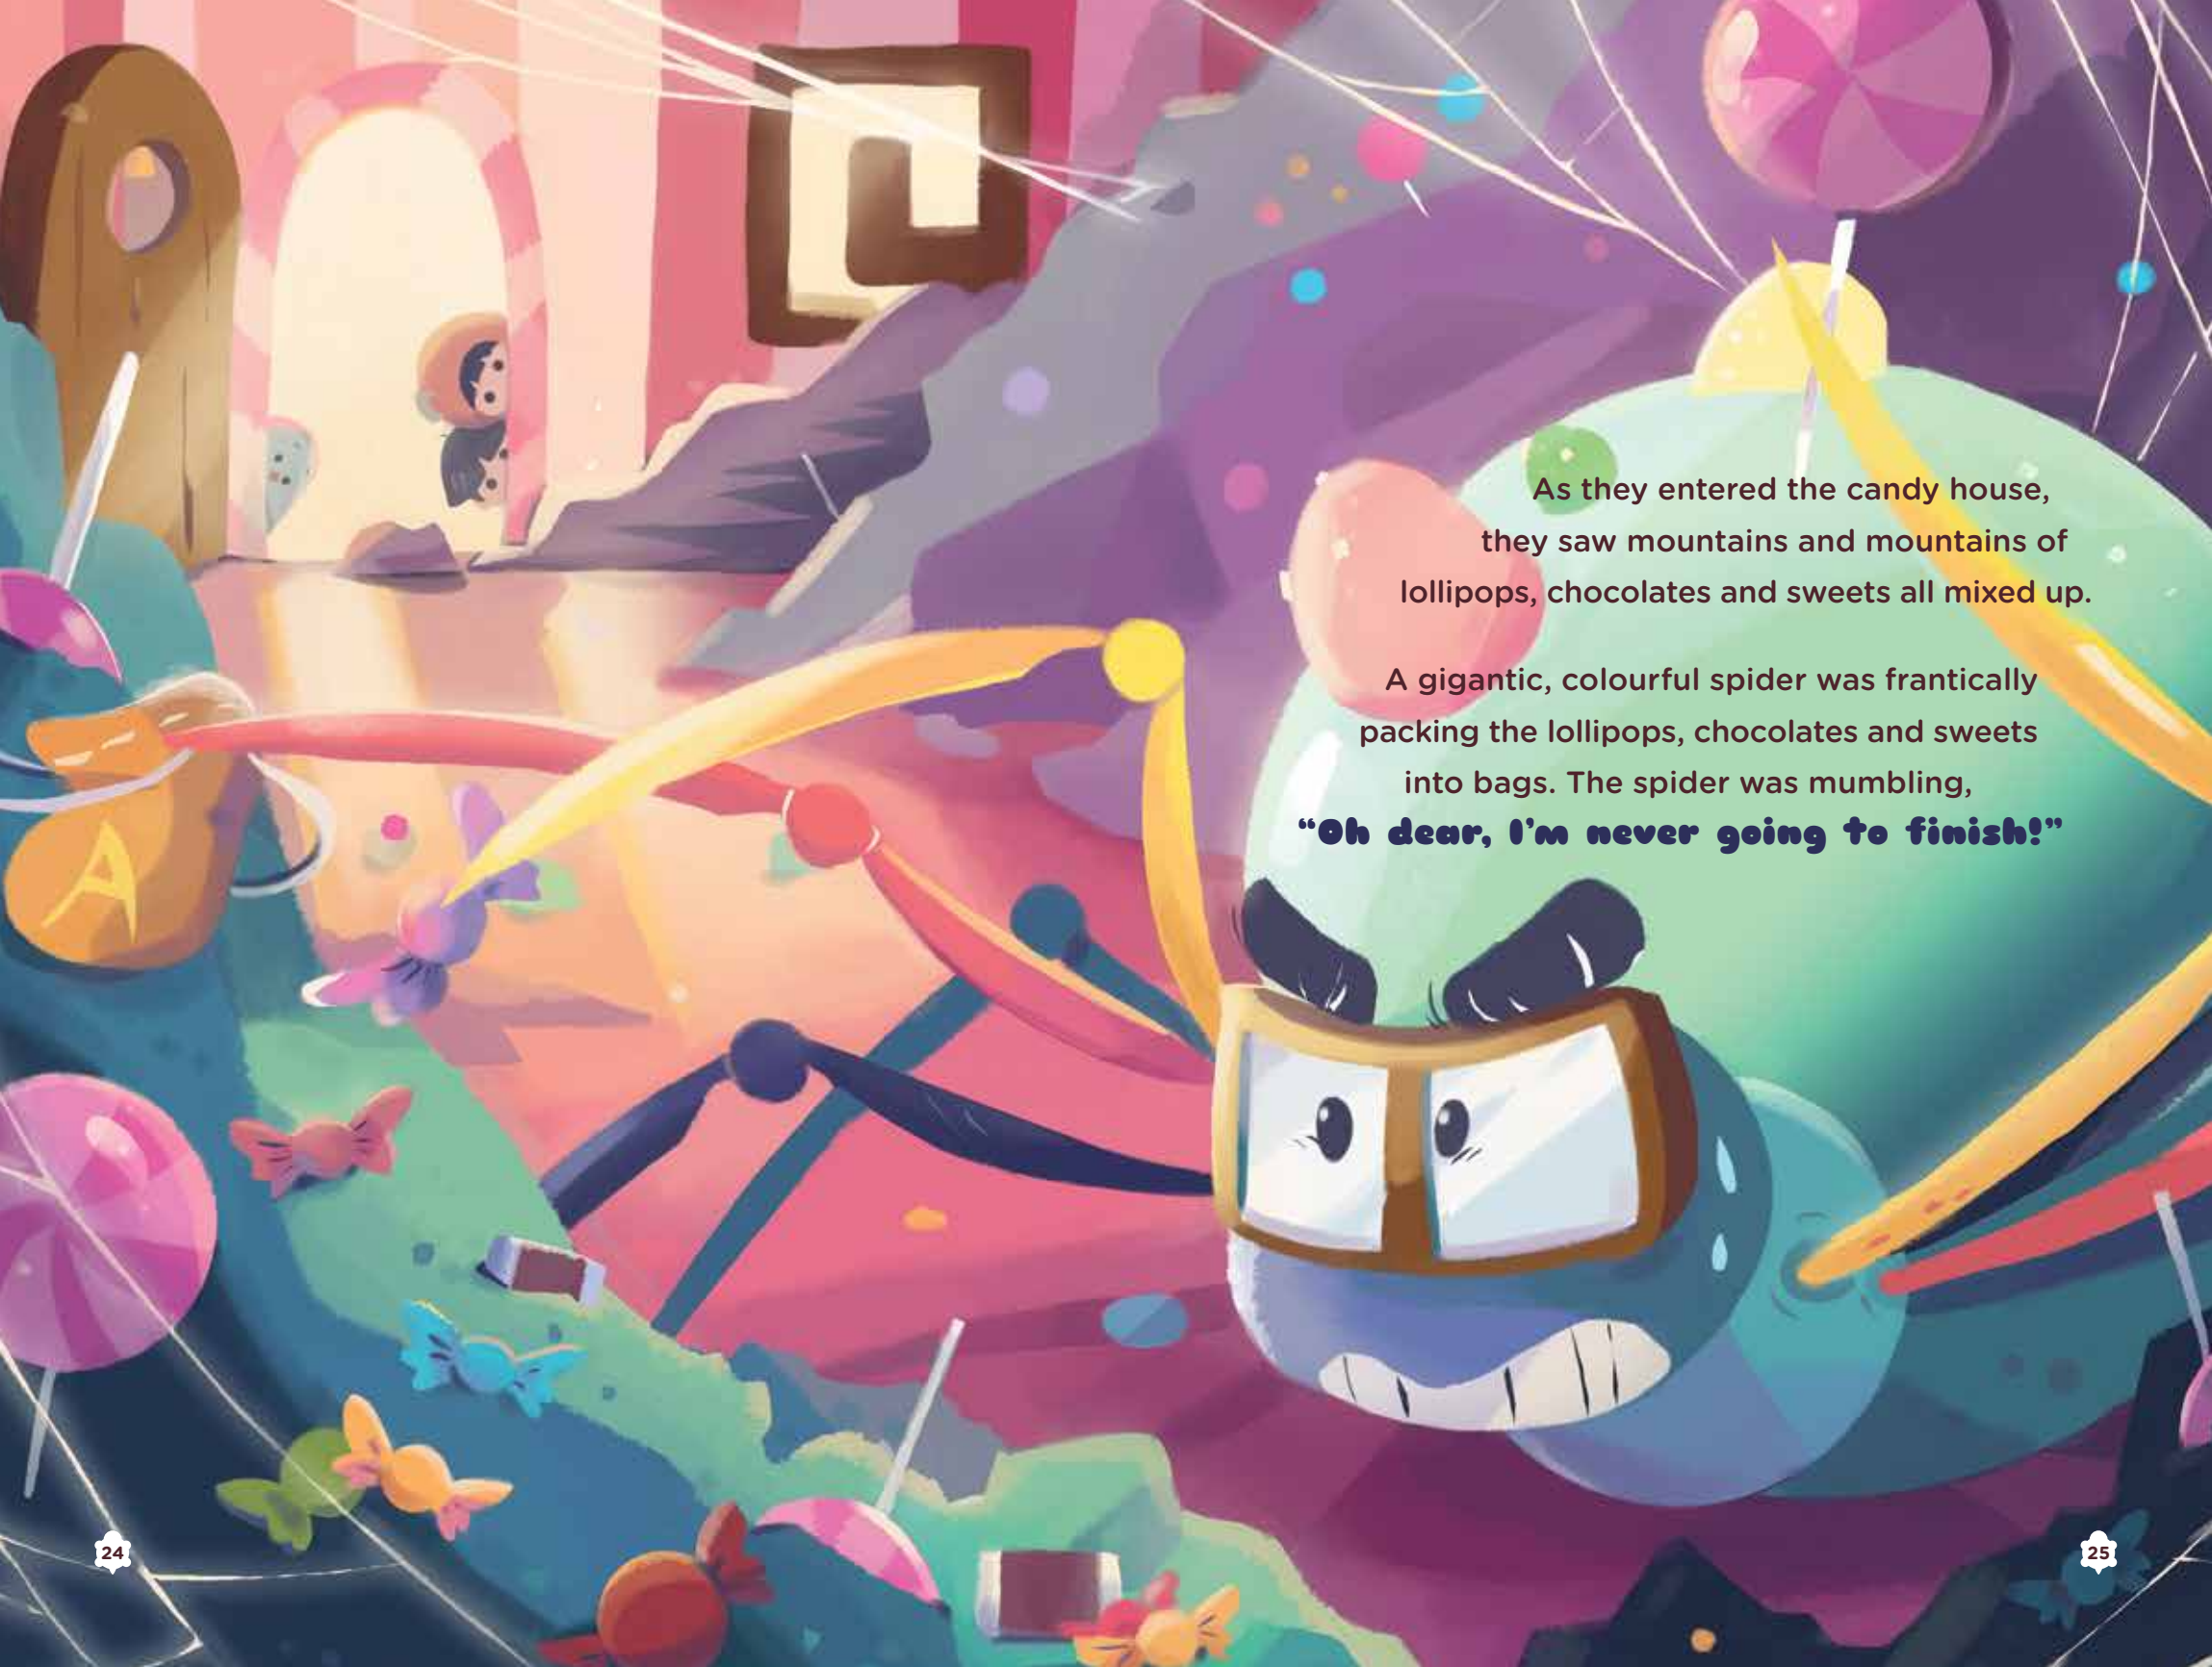

They spotted a house decorated with lots of candy. It had a chocolate door and windows made of sweets, and was surrounded by many large lollipops.

“Look, a candy house!” said Red Egg.

“That must be where the Candy Spider lives.

Let’s go!” said Ang Ku Kueh Boy excitedly. He loved candy and could almost taste the delicious candy in his mouth.

“Yes, let’s!” said Ang Ku Kueh Girl as she ran towards the house. Her brother and Red Egg chased after her.

As they entered the candy house,
they saw mountains and mountains of lollipops, chocolates and sweets all mixed up.

A gigantic, colourful spider was frantically packing the lollipops, chocolates and sweets into bags. The spider was mumbling, “Oh dear, I’m never going to finish!”
