Toxins are present everywhere around us, be it in the air we breathe, the water we drink, or the food we eat. Even your favorite smartphone is a filth farm, teeming with enough bacteria to make you seriously ill. Everyday toxins are getting accumulated in our body, and if it reaches a tipping point you might get severely sick.

To help you realize that it might be time to detox, Bright Side compiled a list of symptoms that indicate a toxin overload in your body. To learn how to detox, read the bonus section at the end.

You suffer from constipation.

When we eat food, we are also inadvertently consuming a lot of chemicals that come with it, such as preservatives, colorants, and artificial flavoring. The intestines that are tasked with digestion also have to face the flak of these toxins. This toxin buildup can lead to an upset stomach and constipation.

Eating organic food, limiting alcohol intake, and drinking plenty of water should help resolve the problem.

You have brain fog.

If you feel dizzy, confused, and are unable to concentrate even in the morning after a good night's sleep, harmful toxins could be messing with you. These toxins cause a series of reactions that dry up the essential vitamins and minerals the body needs to function. It's something similar to what happens when you put bad oil in your car.

25 Pictures That Prove the World Around Us Is Still Full of Magic

You took your morning shower, applied deodorant, and yet in the subway people twitch their nose when you come close to them. You guessed it: toxins might be making you stinky! These toxins, when digested, produce gases and odors which while escaping through your bodily pores can give you an odor that might rival the most fetid fart you've ever experienced.

Aching joints and muscles are running you down.

If you haven't pushed yourself at the gym or done some physically tiring work, but you still have muscle and joint pain, toxin buildup might be the reason. Body aches and pains are indicators that you could have unchecked inflammation in your body, so if you have no other reason for the inflammation, try detoxing.

Falling asleep is getting harder.

On one hand, toxin buildup makes you feel exhausted and on the other, making matters worse, can spoil your sleep. High amounts of toxins in the body can cause the level of the sleep-controlling hormone Cortisol to go awry, thereby negatively impacting your sleep. Insomnia can lead to severe health issues, so if you think that falling asleep is getting harder, consider doing a detox.

You're packing on the pounds.

Despite all the great workouts you're doing at the gym, if you still keep putting on pounds, maybe there is something wrong with your hormones. Toxins can adversely impact the level of certain hormones in the body, including those that are responsible for maintaining weight. Switching to a healthy organic diet and getting a thorough detox should help.

Your breath smells bad even to you.

Bad breath is usually a symptom of digestive problems. It occurs when your digestive system has to struggle in order to digest all that you eat. But digestive problems can also occur when your liver fights to cleanse all the accumulated toxins. Getting rid of the toxins is the only way for you to tackle this problem.

Gravity pulls the toxins down your body, and your toenails can be the ones that suffer. Toes, for a large part of the day, remain inside dark socks and shoes, an ecosystem that fungus loves. These combine to make the toenail a hotbed for fungus growth. While there are prescribed pharmaceutical applications to deal with it, treating it from the inside by detoxing is the holistic way to go.

You are losing your hair faster.

Hair loss is not a symptom of toxic overload caused by everyday toxins. It can be the handiwork of more sinister toxins like arsenic, lead, and thallium (found in cigarette smoke) among others, which can even be lethal. So do not take hair loss lightly and rush to your doctor.

If you find yourself experiencing one or more of the conditions described above, going through a detox might be a good idea. While there are more complex detox procedures available, making some simple lifestyle changes might help as well.

Drink ample amounts of water; it helps flush toxins out.

Toxins wreak havoc on the liver. To keep the liver strong, drink dandelion tea or add parsley, cilantro, or milk thistle to your meal.

Practice yoga. It improves bodily circulation and helps to get rid of toxins.

Brush your teeth at night after dinner. And don't forget to use a tongue scraper too.

Eat only clean, whole, and organic foods.

Add probiotics to your diet.

Use only natural cosmetic products that are free of fragrances and other toxins.
