SILENT NATURE | MIN-WOO BANG

Silent Nature

The canvas becomes a mirror to my innermost feelings. Recent paintings of cloud and sea serve as a poignant reflection of the tumultuous emotions swirling within me in the wake of my father's passing.

Clouds, with their ethereal beauty and transient presence, mirror the ephemeral essence of life itself. Through layers of subtle hues and dynamic forms, I am perhaps conveying the complexity of grief—the moments of darkness and storm, as well as the fleeting glimpses of light and hope that pierce through the shadows.

Likewise, sea paintings offer a metaphorical landscape for contemplation. The vast expanse of the ocean becomes a symbol of both the depths of sorrow and the boundless potential for healing and renewal. In the ebb and flow of the waves, you find echoes of the rhythms of life and the eternal cycle of birth, death, and rebirth.

Each brushstroke becomes a cathartic release, a way to navigate the depths of sorrow and emerge on the shores of acceptance and understanding. Through my painting, I find a connection to something greater than myself—a timeless beauty that transcends the pain of loss and reminds me of the eternal essence of love.
