

Mayan Calendar Update

By Arafelle Oné arafelleon@gmail.com

In 2011/12, the Mayan Calendar ended, didn't it? Well, no, what appeared to end was a 5000-year calendar period called the Long Count, one of many extraordinary numerical systems the ancient Mayans used to measure time. According to Carl Calleman, what happened on the Long Count end date was that all the nine waves of creation for the first time in the Universe's history were all synchronised and went into a phase shift together.

It all began with the big bang when the first creation wave exploded from the Source. That Wave, an underworld described by the Maya, lasted 15-16 billion years. During that extended time, the Earth settled into roughly its present form, and single-cell organisms came into being. In the pyramid-shaped time sequence of the long count calendar, each subsequent Wave lasted a twenty times shorter period and brought into being the first animals (820 million years ago), the first primates (40 million years ago), the first humans (2 million years ago). Since then, the changes in waves and the many detailed lesser cycles within the waves can be shown to coincide with the development of human culture over time. The most telling of these are the changes from 'spiritual' Day to 'spiritual' Night, which happen halfway through a wave. Major civilisations and cultural developments have consistently arisen during the Days and fallen during the Nights when processes of integration and recalibration take place.

At the beginning of his book, The Nine Waves of Creation, Carl Calleman says: "This book describes what I believe to be a deep and long-lasting new paradigm about where we come from and the underlying factors that drive evolution in all its aspects, including those that are behind the course of human history." Similarly, astrologer and shaman Barbara Hand Clow writes in her Forward to The Nine Waves of Creation: "Everything 'out there' is frequencies or waves interpreted by our minds when we observe things. I believe in this definition of the material world based on quantum physics ... Carl Calleman decodes what is, and has been, happening in our quantum-holographic world by proving that the fabled Tree of Life is the central organiser of space-time."

As technological means become available, scientists can look further back in time to study the afterglow of the Big Bang. Contrary to previous beliefs, a recognisable structure has recently emerged in the CMBR (cosmic microwave background radiation). This structure has a Cosmic Axis and polarised fields of temperature that corkscrew around it, bringing to mind many symbolic and physical structures known to us:

- the Caduceus, the traditional symbol of Hermes with two snakes winding around a winged staff
- the DNA double helix
- the Aztec Hunab-Ku (creator) symbol
- innumerable Fibonacci sequence spirals manifesting in Nature
- the Tao, Yin and Yang

As the waves emanating from the Source interact, they form holograms that initiate new realities on all levels of the Universe, from galaxies to earthly bodies and human minds. These holograms are pure potentiality, each having a structure of Light and Dark that influences what comes into physical manifestation.

The four lower waves are in a frequency range that is morphogenetic or biological, while the four highest waves are in the frequency range that may be termed mental. The Fifth Wave at the boundary between these two frequency ranges has qualities typical of both. As the waves interact, they form holograms that create new realities on all levels of the Universe, from galaxies to earthly bodies and human minds. The side of the globe and the side of the human mind and brain that receive the light at the beginning of a wave is thus creatively activated. The waves have had significant consequences in developing human consciousness and civilisation. At the end of the unified Fifth Wave, the polarised Sixth Wave came in, highlighting the Left and Western hemispheres of the planet and the global mind. The separation from the One Source and emphasis on left brain functioning was acutely felt, creating fear-filled insecurities leading to a need to control and dominate. This need was the beginning of the patriarchal age and many of its 'evils', the suppression of the Divine Feminine and subjugation of women being at the root, coinciding with the beginning of slavery and war worldwide.

During the peaks and valleys, that is, Days and Nights, of the Sixth Wave, patriarchal civilisations have risen and fallen, as have the struggles for equality which have also had their backlashes. Those born before 1999 (most of the population today) experience the Seventh Wave of unified Night consciousness, which began in 1755, as their highest frequency. Because this Wave created holograms of darkness, it may have exacerbated the fears created by the Sixth Wave. Humans fought even harder to control and subdue the natural world, which appeared more threatening than essentially divine, as perceived during the Fifth Wave. Therefore one of the greatest needs now is for us to re-embrace Night, darkness and all that we have repressed because of our fears (see How to Use the Ninth Wave Chart for suggestions on how to do this).

There are signs now that many of the Millennium generation (those born with natural access to the energies of the Eighth and Ninth waves) are, in fact, more awake and 'enlightened' and are beginning to change the world positively. There are many examples of young people coming up with highly innovative solutions for the various crises the world is facing. Some of the most extraordinary leaders today are still in their teens, are non-white, and many are young women, bringing an entirely new perspective to the patriarchal worldview. With Ninth Wave unity energy being more accessible generally, people of all ages gather in groups, in real-time/space or in the virtual group-mind reality that is the internet (Eighth Wave), to work, meditate and play together to achieve heightened states of awareness. The focus in many of these groups is not just to bliss out together but to move the human race on in its evolution, to co-create a new paradigm of reality and bring a new unified world into being.

The last Wave that incorporated a unified Day consciousness was the Fifth Wave which began 102,500 years ago and lasted 15,800 years. A sense of reflective self-consciousness, art, spirituality and ritual all have roots in this age. Many indigenous cultures worldwide have maintained their rituals, ceremonies and 'shamanistic' practices that put them in touch with energies that exist beyond a material form in what is now known as the Field.

Now the time has come (often as prophesied) for many of these practices to be shared. Again the internet comes into play, allowing people to get together in groups around the planet to share in ceremonies, sometimes coinciding with significant peaks and valleys of the Eighth and especially the Ninth Wave. Hope for the future of a more whole, evolved and enlightened world arises with these last high-frequency waves of creation.
