Bodum Chambord French Press

If you like coffee with substance and heft, go French. The mesh plunger pushes more oil and coffee particles into your cup. $40, bodum.com

Hario V60

It makes a well-rounded coffee. With this brewer, go with a fine grind and be careful to pour in the water slowly. $41, prima-coffee.com

notNeutral Gino Dripper

The 2014 U.S. Brewers Cup champion used the Gino to win. It creates a more balanced brew than other pourover cones. $24, notneutral.com

Siphon Brewer

This setup is a hassle to wash, but it makes a clean, consistent cup that's worth the effort. Plus, just look at the freakin' thing! $75, amazon.com

Chemex

The Chemex's superthick paper filters remove more of the coffee's oil for a cleaner, brighter-tasting cup. $42, chemexcoffeemaker.com

Bonavita BV1900TS

This unit pre-wets grounds (ideal for hands-off fresh coffee) and holds water in the 195 to 205°F brewing sweet spot. $190, bonavitaworld.com

Keurig 2.0 K350

The premeasured pods make brewing effortless. Downsides: The cups end up in landfills because they're not easy to recycle. $180, keurig.com

Clever Dripper

It's perfect for brewing at your desk: The coffee doesn't drain out of the cone until you set the device on your office mug. $22, amazon.com

Aerobie AeroPress

This on-the-go system works like a French press, except that the paper AeroPress filter removes more of the coffee's oils. $29, aeropress.com

GSI Collapsible Java Drip

Backpackers, rejoice: This drip cone collapses flat and weighs less than 5 ounces. Brew atop a mug, glug, and trek forth! $13, gsioutdoors.com
