From safety officer to SiFa learning facilitator – Interview with Marko

Age: 28      Education: Safety Engineer
Origin: Serbia      Occupation: EHS Manager & SiFa Learning Facilitator

„Every future SiFa should bring four mindsets: an open-minded attitude, a continuous willingness to learn, the ability to take criticism and the will to constantly strive for improvement.“

Becoming a occupational safety officer (SiFa) can be challenging, but fortunately, you don't have to do it alone. Learning facilitators are there to support and encourage you.

In this interview, our learning facilitator Marko talks about his role, the challenges and rewards of his job, and offers valuable tips for aspiring SiFas.

Whether you're considering SiFa training, just starting it, or already in the midst of it, this interview will offer you valuable insights and advice to help help you on your path to becoming a SiFa.

What Our Participants Say

„Our instructor is always available, and is very friendly in advising on all questions. She encourages and demands self-organized learning and working out results. High praise.“

– Jens S.

„I learned more about occupational safety during the training at Auraplan Academy than I could gather in 10 years as a craftsman. All in all, full marks!“

– Philipp H.

„I like the open interaction, the teamwork in the seminars and the lively exchange among the „students“. I don't regret at all to have done a training as a Sifa at the Auraplan Academy.“

– Marco O.

Your Mentors

Our team is made up of a wide variety of nationalities, backgrounds and characters. Heterogeneous teams are winning teams, because at the end of the day we benefit from the contrasts and different points of view of our colleagues.

Due to the practical experience of our employees and their academic backgrounds, we are professionals in combining this perfectly in our seminars. This guarantees our participants the best possible experience and training.
