It's been said to me more than a few times by cis people that they don't really have any trans friends or know anyone who's trans. Chances are, actually, you do. The idea that trans people can be identified on sight is incorrect. Even if you ~think~ someone is trans you can never know unless you speak to them. It's far too easy to fall into the trap that gender is something you can see. ❖Gender Critics❖ or TERFS will have you believe that this broadening, growth and acceptance of gender diversity in society is somehow anti-feminist or a threat to cis women. While they sit and make decisions about the bodies of trans women, just as cis men have done to them. Trans women are not a threat. They just want to pee. They just want to live. This isn't difficult to understand and its not just a fight for space and equality, its a fight for survival. If you see someone in a bathroom and you ~think~ they might be trans go do your own business and let them do theirs. find out more
