The Oral Systemic Connection:
A Healthy Mouth is a Healthy Body!

As you know, there is a positive association between periodontitis and a wide variety of other health conditions. That's right! Research shows that maintaining a consistent and thorough oral care routine is not only important for your patients' oral health, but is essential for their overall health and wellness as well.

How does it work? Bacteria that accumulate on the teeth make the gums more susceptible to infection. The immune system's pathological response to infection is inflammation. A chronic state of inflammation can eventually destroy the gums and bone structure that support the teeth, creating a portal for the entry of harmful bacteria to disseminate throughout the body via the circulatory system. Inflammation caused by gum disease can lead to other serious health problems such as cardiovascular disease, diabetes, and Alzheimer's, to name a few.

It is important for patients to understand that inflammation in the mouth is a precursor to inflammation in the rest of the body.

The risk between oral and systemic disease is a key reason for patients to keep their mouths healthy by adhering to a daily oral health regimen of correct brushing and flossing, combined with regular visits to you, their dental professional.

Whitening with GLO products actually gives patients a healthy edge. GLO whitening gel is formulated with hydrogen peroxide, which is a whitening agent as well as an antimicrobial. Hydrogen peroxide limits the growth of bad bacteria in the mouth, thus promoting improved oral, as well as overall, health. Now that's something to GLO about!

GLO supporter of the month

"Dr. Levine, the [GLO] whitening results are excellent. An interesting clinical observation we had is that most of the patients had some gingivitis, but after the 5 days of treatment, they were all healed!"
