

A few pictures of our trip...

The lionesses were a bit terrifying. No mercy here... they hunt to kill and lions will kill just for the sport...yikes!

On our last day we saw Jackels. They hunt in packs and during the night they killed a springbok. Their tails, large and fluffy like a big fox tail, were wagging so furiously back and forth that Raymie started giggling at how “happy” they seemed. Not so much happiness for the springbok...

The baboons were very bold and dangerous. The dining area of the resort had an open air section. The baboons would come down off the roof, when there weren't very many people and grab food quickly right off someone's plate. It caused an uproar as people are scared trying to get back. They move quickly and are aggressive.

These animals are called Klipspringers. They are a type of antelope. Locals call them Rock Jumpers. They move so strangely...

Interesting fact about Rhinos is their horns grow back if they are cut off or damaged. Imagine that! All the poachers that are killing the Rhinos, literally wiping out their own illegal business, lol, could do the same thing and just not kill them...

In 2017, one night a helicopter landed on the safari and poachers cut 7 Rhinos horns off. The poachers escaped. Since that time, security roams at night to watch for poachers. Horns are growing back.

We saw a several rhinos running across the safari. It was really amazing because when they stopped they went right into a circle formation, facing all sides. It was beautiful.

Elephants are gentle creatures that love each other. All elephants are born with 6 sets of teeth, each set lasting approximately 10 years. According to the guide, all elephants starve to death when the last set of molars wear out and they are no longer able to chew up plants.

I was surprised by the zebra. Black and white stripes would seem like they would stand out on the country side but they don't. They just seemed to blend in to the country side unless several of them were standing together. They were also much smaller than I assumed. Fun fact. Zebra babies are born with legs as long as their mothers so that predators don't see they are babies.

Unity waited for a giraffe picture. She loves giraffes! We only saw giraffes a couple of times during our three day stay. They seemed a little fragile to me...
