Lindsay Tigar, CNN Underscored

Situation: Your wanderlust feeds your travel bug and you're forever tempted by those last-minute, inexpensive flight alerts. Issue: You have yet to figure out how to pack a simple carry-on.

It takes practice to become a minimalist (just ask Marie Kondo), and while certain packing strategies work, it really comes down to what you bring.

And of course, where you're going.

While some trips need only a T-shirt and jeans, other adventures require cumbersome gear that can send you far over the weight limit.

To your rescue are these super useful and compact travel products that offer plenty of multi-purpose solutions. From a stroller that's ideal for nomadic parents to a pair of flats to throw in your purse, consider this your guide to foldable travel must haves:

For parents: The Clutch Stroller by Delta Children ($149.99; amazon.com)

Remember those days when you could sunbathe for hours, reading, napping, drinking? Travel is different now that you're a parent (read: stressful) — but this foldable stroller makes jet-setting easy peasy. It folds smaller than a pillow and weighs only 11 pounds. Just be prepared for funny looks when you check in plane side, since baby gear doesn't count toward carry-on allowance for most airlines.
