The sinus node spontaneously depolarizes, thereby initiating the electrical cycle of the heart. The impulse spreads through the atria via specialized conduction pathways and the interatrial bundle of Bachmann; this creates the P wave, which represents right and left atrial activation or depolarization, and results in contraction of the atria. As the electrical signal reaches the atrioventricular (AV) node, the impulse is delayed (the PR segment on the electrocardiogram [ECG]), thereby allowing the ventricles to fill via atrial contraction. The wavefront of depolarization finally spreads via the His-Purkinje system to the ventricles, resulting in uniform ventricular activation and contraction. QRS deflections on the ECG correspond to depolarization of the ventricles. next page
