A woman is shown from the chest down, wearing a white long-sleeved top. She is wearing a gold necklace with two circular pendants, a gold bracelet with five circular links, and a large gold ring with a yellow stone. Her right hand is resting on a dark, gnarled branch. The background is a warm, golden, textured surface, possibly a wall or a large piece of art. The overall mood is elegant and sophisticated.

On July 23, 1641 the Nuestra Señora De La Piedad a Spanish Concepcion set from Vera Cruz, Mexico in a fleet of 30 ships. The Spanish Crown organized such fleets between the 15th and 17th centuries to bring New Spain the material riches primarily silver and gold, from New Spain territories to maintain its economic and military strength. Since there had been an shipment of precious metals the previous year the Concepcion fleet carried the Admirante (Admiral's Ship) carried an exceptionally large treasure cargo. While negotiating the Florida Strait, the fleet was caught in a violent hurricane which scattered and sank most of the ships. The 600-ton, 133-foot Concepcion suffered severe damage and was ordered by Admiral Juan de Villavicencio to head for Puerto Rico for repair. The pilots aboard the vessel miscalculated the course and rammed the treasure laden galleon onto the treacherous Aspersion Reef, some 80 miles northeast of Hispaniola near the Dominican Republic. Despite the sailors' attempts to save both the ship and those on the wreck and sank. Records indicate that approximately 190 of the 500 passengers carried by the Admirante reached land. Raiders perceived that prior to leaving the ship survivor piled substantial quantities of the silver treasure (ship and adjacent coral reef) with the intention of returning and claiming at least part of what was reputed to be the richest treasure ever to sail out of the New World.

Repeated recovery efforts the Spanish Crown over the next few decades, including several expeditions by Admiral Villavicencio, as well as by the English and Dutch were unsuccessful. On February 20, 1687 a Boston sea captain named William Phips with the financial backing of King James II and the Duke of Albemarle discovered the legendary Concepcion after one unsuccessful attempt. Phips's Indian divers, over a period of several months recovered a total of 37,000 pounds of Spanish reales, 27,500 pounds of silver bars and a variety of other silver artifacts including precious gems and some gold. Despite the splendor of the Phips recovery, Spanish records of the Concepcion's cargo indicated the vast majority of treasure remained beneath the sea. For his substantial contribution to the treasury of the English Crown Phips was knighted and later appointed the first Governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony.

Two hundred and ninety-one year later on November 28, 1978, Burt D. Weber Jr. like Phips the zone of his discovery a 16-year-old American on British flag vessel rediscovered the Concepcion after a disappointing and fruitless first expedition. Ten year of intensive search in the archives of Seville and elsewhere were essential to Weber's discovery. The research produced the log of the Honey, one of two ships Phips used in his 1687 expedition. Also indispensable to the discovery was the development of a diver-operable ocean magnetometer far more sensitive to ferromagnetic material than earlier models. The second Concepcion Phipps has yielded a magnificent treasure consisting of precious reales from the New World mints of Mexico City and Potosi (Bolivia) astrolabes (navigational instruments of the period) gold artifacts 17th century Ming Dynasty porcelains and many other valuable artifacts, including silver plates, candlesticks and other implements of that era.

This certificate authenticates that the reales with which it is being presented were mined in Mexico City between the year 1630 and 1641 under the coat of arms of Philip IV, King of Spain. The certificate also verifies that the reales were salvaged from the wrecksite of the Concepcion by Seaquest International, Inc. in the Silver Shoals in the exclusive economic zone of the Dominican Republic.
