Prospect of state-owned bank doesn't excite all

Opinion is divided over whether $2.1b Cwbank deal will be a win for taxpayers

Janis Thibodeau While other banks have in recent years been preoccupied with reducing the amount of capital they hold, Cwbank director under New Zealand's largest state-owned enterprise, the Crown has agreed to buy the bank's parent company, Asia Group Holdings (AGH), from state-owned entities. The deal, announced last week, is valued at $2.1 billion. It is the largest acquisition in the history of the state-owned enterprise. The deal is expected to be completed by the end of the year. Quiet quitting' is the new work to Cameron Smith In an era when so many workers are leaving their jobs, the concept of 'quiet quitting' has become a popular term. It refers to the idea of doing the minimum required to get by at work, without putting in extra effort or showing any passion. This trend has been observed across various industries and is often attributed to a lack of job satisfaction and a desire for better work-life balance.
