—Amy

breakfast nook Never mind the name: Amy and the kids eat breakfast at the kitchen island and dinner right here. The antiqued gray oak table is from Rik, and the captain’s chairs are from Pottery Barn. As a nod to the surrounding nature preserve, Sally hung an oil painting by local artist Dave Gloman. The chandelier, from Lumens, looks like leaves in a fairy-tale forest.

kitchen Sally and Hannah suggested yellow cabinets, and Amy green-lighted the idea—then panicked. “I worried it would be too bold, but it’s perfect,” she says. The counters were a happy accident: Amy had ordered white quartzite, but when she went to pick them up, they’d been sold. These deeply veined ones have caramel tones that complement the paint. “It was meant to be,” she says. The barstools are from Industry West, and the wood pendants are from Barn Light.
