Ley Lines, Vile Vortices

1921: Alfred Watkins identifies ancient trackways in the British landscape as 'ley lines', line-of-sight navigation used during neolithic times that had persisted in the landscape over millennia.

They are 'Hellige Linien' to the Germans, 'Fairy paths' to the Irish, 'Dragon Lines' to the Chinese, 'Spirit Lines' to Peruvians and 'Song Paths' to the Australian Aborigines etc., around the world.

Ley lines became associated with spiritual and mystical theories about alignments of land forms, drawing on the Chinese concept of feng shui.

After the second world war Dr. Ernst Hartmann described a net consisting of naturally occurring lines, usually positively and negatively charged. It is the intersections that are seen to be a source of potential problems according to the doctor.

1983: The hexakis icosahedron grid, coordinate calculations, and point classification system are the original research of Beth Hagens and William S. Becker.

Vortex sites is a term referring to twelve geographic areas alleged by Ivan Sanderson to have been the sites of mysterious disappearances, he asserts that twelve 'vortices' are situated along particular lines of latitude.

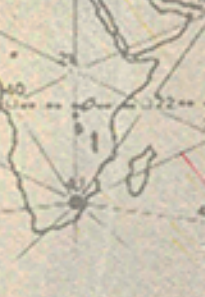

Curry lines are a global grid network of electrically charged lines of natural origin first discovered by Dr. Manfred Curry and Dr. Wittmann. There is some disagreement between authorities as to how wide apart these lines are, but the lines themselves are not seen as a problem, only the points where they cross.
