RM58 Series

WORLD-CLASS INNOVATIVENESS

The RM58 Armchair, designed and handmade by Roman Modzelewski in 1958, was one of the earliest European examples of polyester-glass laminate furniture, that was first introduced by Ray and Charles Eames in USA. Modzelewski's innovativeness lay not only in the materials used in its production. The fully-closed organic form of the seat had no counterpart in its time, either in Poland or elsewhere.

Nowadays the use of new materials and industrial technologies in the production of the RM58 Armchair made it possible to overcome the constraints of craft manufacturing and to offer a product of consistently high quality which can be manufactured quickly in large batches. It also made it possible to create a matte version of the armchair, providing new aesthetic appeal in a variety of new, modern colors.

RM58 CLASSIC

Story behind:

The RM58 Classic is the most faithful implementation version of the groundbreaking armchair designed by Roman Modzelewski. It is made using modern composites that are the contemporary equivalents of polyester and glass laminates originally used by Modzelewski in 1958. In analogy to the historical version, RM58 Classic is made using modern technologies applied in yacht construction. In order to provide a high-quality finish and lasting durability, the surface of the seat is covered with a color gelcoat. RM58 is a fine example of Space Age design, which crosses boundaries between new technological approaches with modern and organic aesthetics.

RM58 MATTE

Story behind:

The RM58 Matte is also the modern hard shell version of the historic Roman Modzelewski chair. Thanks to the rotational moulding technology the historical model of the armchair was reproduced, this time as a piece of furniture prepared for serial production using new technologies and materials. The precisely developed form constitutes a 100% replica of the original.
