Founded in Melbourne, Australia in 2003, Third Drawer Down is an international design studio and global leader in licensed merchandise and retail strategy for cultural institutions, hotels and multinational retailers. Abigail Crompton, Artistic Director and Founder of Third Drawer Down explains the vision behind accessible art. "Dedicated to artistic integrity, we translate art into everyday objects creating art to live with. Third Drawer Down creates the language between the artist and the product." We are highly collectible, worthwhile and exciting. It's art for your home, and it's right here, right now.

Third Drawer Down works with the most influential artists of the day including Louise Bourgeois, Guerrilla Girls, Yayoi Kusama, Magda Archer & David Shrigley to create accessible art. Currently, women artists represent 65% of our artist collections, and we continue to inspire customers to challenge gender, racial, and social barriers. Abigail, a celebrated zeitgeist and collaborator, informs the world of what is next. Third Drawer Down, Art to live with.

From its very outset, Third Drawer Down has collaborated with a number of the world's most influential artists to bring you affordable and accessible wall art. A vast collection of Tea Towels featuring the brilliance of Yayoi Kusama, Louise Bourgeois, Magda Archer, Kaylene Whiskey, Alex Katz, and Chris Ofili, among others, are ready to grace your kitchen, bring life to your walls or make the perfect gift.

Paul Yore is one of Australia's most thoughtprovoking and consequential multidisciplinary artists. Born in Naarm/Melbourne in 1987, he lives and works on Gunaikurnai Country in Gippsland, Victoria, and completed his studies in painting, archaeology and anthropology at Monash University in 2010.

Yore's work engages with the histories of religious art and ritual, queer identity, pop-culture and neo-liberal capitalism, recasting a vast array of found images, materials and texts into sexually and politically loaded tableaux and assemblages which celebrate hybrid and fluid identities, unstable and contradictory meanings, and the glowing horizon of queer worldmaking.

Born in Indulkana, a remote Aboriginal community in the Anangu Pitjantjatjara Yankunytjatjara (APY) Lands in South Australia, Kaylene spent her childhood steeped in 1980s pop culture.

Evoking familiar gestures of the everyday, her paintings use bright colours rendering pop stars in flat pictorial space, engaging with Whiskey's own life in rural Australia.

Whiskey perfectly creates comic book-like worlds on her canvases that are instantly nostalgic and captivating and is part of the talented collective Iwantja Arts, the art centre in the Indulkana Community.

Cary Leibowitz, often referred to as 'Candyass' is a neurotic and overly confident man who struggles with what came before him and what comes after—and will he ever catch up.

With the premise that "I had to be honest about whatever I was doing" Leibowitz creates bold artworks rooted in the language of confessions of anxiety, declarations of victory, communiqué from personal revolutions and punch lines of phantom jokes.

Soundsuits camouflage the body, masking and creating a second skin that conceals race, gender and class, forcing the viewer to look without judgement. They serve as a visual embodiment of social justice that represents both brutality and empowerment.

Artist, author, educator, and organizer, Faith Ringgold (b. 1930, New York, NY) is one of the most influential cultural figures of her generation, with a career linking the multi-disciplinary practices of the Harlem Renaissance to the political art of young Black artists working today.

For sixty years, Ringgold has drawn from both personal autobiography and collective histories to both document her life as an artist and mother and to amplify the struggles for social justice and equity. From creating some of the most indelible artworks of the civil rights era to challenging accepted hierarchies of art versus craft through her experimental story quilts, Faith Ringgold has produced a body of work that bears witness to the complexity of the American experience.

British artist David Shrigley evolved his drawing style as a reaction to expectations of the creative process throughout his art school career. He bases his work on intuition rather than long-winded theory, resulting in a incredibly candid and relatable form of social commentary. A self-editor, Shrigley rips up whatever he thinks doesn't work into teeny-weeny pieces so that they can't be recycled. He holds onto the things that surprise him and make him laugh, and we can't help but be forever grateful for his hilarious, frank creations.

Third Drawer Down has been collaborating with David Shrigley for over a decade and he is 197cm tall.

Born in Adelaide as Margaret Rose McPherson in 1875, Margaret Preston had by the 1920s become one of Australia's leading modernist artists. Attaching equal importance to craft and painting, she had, by the late 1920s, gained an exceptional place in the Sydney art establishment. In 1929 she became the first woman and modernist to be invited by the Art Gallery of NSW to contribute a self-portrait to the collection. In great efforts to develop Australian "national art", she was also one of the first nonIndigenous Australian artists to use Aboriginal motifs in her work.

This collection was designed and produced in collaborative license with The National Gallery of Australia.

MISAKI KAWAI

Prolific Japanese-born, now LA-based artist Misaki Kawai makes vibrant paintings, sculptures, and papier-mâché works in an appealing fauxnaïf style that embraces the honest imagery of childhood.

After studying at Kyoto University of the Arts in her native Japan, Kawai moved to New York in 2000, where she developed her take on heta-uma, an illustrative style rooted in manga that roughly translates from Japanese to mean "bad but good."

Kawai promoted her early work by selling zines and drawings on city streets, and gradually became known for her charming and joyful body of work. Her pieces often centre on goofy characters and incorporate multimedia elements like fluffy pompoms.

Twee and energetic, her works evoke a timeless feeling of uninhibited, innocent glee.
