Scottish perfume & skincare

Est. 1950

We believe

that what is best for your skin is also best for the environment.

Our company has been harnessing the goodness of native seaweeds to create high performance skincare for many years, our chapter of the story has resulted in the further development of an ethical seaweed skincare brand.

We became more and more convinced of the value of organic ingredients and the need to create products which had no petrochemicals, lanolin, parabens or indeed any harsh chemicals which could irritate the skin.

We are the most established Scottish skincare brand here in the UK. We love our history and are delighted to part of this story.

We always use active ingredients therapeutic concentrations.

History of Diana Drummond

The brand was created by Amhlaidh MacAndreis in the 1950s just outside Lochgilphead, Argyll. He named it after his mother – Margaret Drummond, and Diana, described as a celtic goddess of hunting and healing.

He developed both a face cream, which he called Seaweed Skinfood, and a range of perfumes, initially from his caravan home. The Seaweed Skinfood was the first skincare in the UK using seaweed we know of.

With both the seaweed and the perfumes Amhlaidh was working with natural healthy products familiar to him in the Argyll country and coastline.

Founder_Mr. MacAndreis

"Mr. MacAndreis was a very well-known in the area, and people really liked the products. Everyone had a bottle of perfume on the dressing table."

"The perfume factory had been on the banks of Crinan Canal. It was quite a small hut, where his perfumery was. The employees were approximately 10 people."
