

Leadership Conference on Collaboration Talk Synopses

12th May 2016

Doors open at 8.00am for an 8.30am start. The day ends at 3.45pm

Speaker	Talk
Jack Sheehan	Thus Spoke Colin Jack will speak about working for Colin Powell, US Presidents and NATO. He will share his 'rules for life' that apply to both military and personal/professional leadership, illustrating these with examples.
Andrew Bull	Collaboration: The (Not So) Easy Option Andrew will discuss some of the common pitfalls to collaboration and show how coaching and behavioural science can be used to support the process, and increase the likelihood of success.
Neil Park	Coach Me If You Can We have persuaded Neil to speak about his remarkable coaching journey from being a generally stereotypical 'too busy' micro manager to the much more relaxed and enlightened leader he is today. He will discuss his coaching experiences and his 'moment of truth', explaining the impact it had on him and his people.
Paul Sexton	No Silver Bullet Paul will talk about his experiences at Scottish Water improving the way they work with their supply chain. Along the way, he has learned that there is no one thing that makes good collaboration; it's a multitude of small things that make it truly work.
Howard Lees	The Intuition Trap Howard will explain why intuition lets us down when it comes to collaboration. He will frame his talk using behavioural coaching techniques and discuss how coaching can improve collaborative working practices.
Joanne Lees	It's Only Words Most knowledge workers have a rough idea of what they want to say, but rarely plan and rehearse their verbal behaviours. Joanne will discuss verbal behaviours and how they are crucial to the success of collaboration and coaching.
