Inventory list as of 11/28/23 (final inventory subject to change)

Variety	Description	Category	Country of Origin
Abicou	Wonderful French variety that has great split resistance and is mid season. A dark berry fig with good richness.	Bordeaux	France
Abou George	Syrian variety that seems to be an early Mt Etna type fig. It has shown good winter resistance.	Dark Berry	Syria
Adriatic JH	This is a great green fig with blood-red interior. It is a later-ripening fig but has great flavor in spite of cool weather while ripening in the fall. It also exhibits good winter resistance. Very visually stimulating. Delicious fig, vigorous.	Adriatic	Italy
Allentown Black	This was a find by Bass at Trees of Joy nursery. It has been growing in the ground in Allentown for many years. I have grown it in the ground here in Lancaster (slightly warmer) for the last four years. It really is quite productive and has good winter resistance. I feel it resists winter damage than most other Mt Etna type figs. It is a good dark berry fig with very good production	Dark Berry	Italy
Armenian	This variety was introduced by Encanto Farms. It is a nice sized light green fig with pink interior. It is quite refreshing and seems to be in the same family as Atreano. Mid season ripener and has good productivity.	Sugar	Armenia
Atreano	Large yellow green fig with pink flesh. It is perhaps the most vigorous in my collection. Juicy and sweet, this Italian fig is a standard for the North East. Mid-late season, with great productivity.	Sugar	Italy
Azores Dark (Sao Miguel Roxo)	AKA Sao Miguel Roxo. It is Mt. Etna-like but is uniquely sweet and drips honey. This is very helpful for resistance to splitting and souring.	Dark Berry	Azores
Bakio	This is a golden brown fig from Spain. It is very sweet and carmel-like. Mid season.	Sugar	Spain
Barada	This is a small yellow fig from Syria. I have it in the ground. It fairly winter resistant, but it seldom produces many figs. I would consider growing in a pot for the North East.	Honey	Syria
Barbillone	This was an excellent surprise this year. Supposedly a dark version of white Marseilles, it performed very well with a strong sugar flavor with fruity notes.	Honey	Italy
Bardonnex Petite Violet	This is a Swiss fig that seems to have a dwarf like growing habit. The figs are very complex and are slightly smaller than most Bordeaux types.	Bordeaux	Switzerland
Bari	Black fig from Bari, Italy. Good hardiness and rich flavor. We have grown in ground for a few years and shows unique winter resistance.	Dark Berry	Italy
Bass' Favorite	This seems to be in the Black Madeira family. The great fig collector, Bass, believes it to be his favorite. Excellent quality fig with exotic berry flavor.	Exotic Berry
Battaglia Green	Very good Adriatic type fig with good splitting resistance and is slightly earlier than most Adriatics grown in the ground here in PA. It is sort of rare to get many in ground unprotected Adriatics to ripen in this area, but this year 2023, we ripened almost half the set crop. That ended up being close to 20 pounds of fruit from the mother tree.	Adriatic	Italy
Belleclare Sport	This is a monster of a fig. It is over 100 grams per fig. It is from the legendary Belleclare nursery in Plainview, NY. It is a new arrival for us, but did ripen a bunch. It is a yellow-bronze fig that can have reddish blush when it is earlier in the season. There was less of the dark color deeper into the season. Interesting leaves and the flavor is a light berry with deep sugar notes.	Sugar / Light Berry
Belle di Maria	These figs are bronze with deep red interior. They are complex and sweet. Also they seem to be mid season ripening (after 3 years of data collection).	Sugar	Italy
Beltrana	Medium to large fig. Yellow to light green with deep red interior. Intense complex flavor. It is on the late side, and pot culture is recommended for this variant.	Adriatic	Spain
Bisirri #3	This is one of the long lost figs from Mr. Bisirri in Philadelphia. Bisirri #3 may have been a neighbor's fig that was stored in Mr. Bisirri's greenhouse over the winter. It is dark berry and seems to be larger than the average Mt Etna type fig. Thanks to Ricci for this excellent find.	Dark Berry	Italy
Black Beauty 10	This was a highly touted variety upon its release. It seems to be a good quality Bordeaux type that ripens mid to late season. Black shiny fig with complex strawberry flavor.	Bordeaux
Black Bethlehem	This is a dark berry fig that is very complex and rich. It is very winter-resistant and is a mid-season fig. It is an unusually productive variety.	Dark Berry	Greece
Black Donovan	This seems to be a VdB variant. I think it needs the fig wasp, so I would only order if in CA in wasp country. The mother tree will become rootstock next year.	Bordeaux	Bulgaria
Black Greek	This variety was introduced by Marius in Ohio. I have 3 or these in the ground and they always do well / are one of my most dependable producers. It is a dark fig with deep red interior, mid-season ripener with great winter resistance.	Dark Berry	Greece
Black Kutfeji	A Bordeaux type fig from Hungary with excellent flavor. It is one of the top Bordeaux figs in terms of flavor	Bordeaux	Hungary
Black Madeira KK	This is identical to my other clean strain of Black Madeira. It was famous for being a clean strain as opposed to the FMV riddled UCDavis version.	Exotic Berry	Portugal
Black Manzanita	This was believed to be a seedling, but it is common and does not require pollination. I think it shares many characteristics with Galicia Negra. There were some minor differences, including darker pulp and rounder shape.	Bordeaux
Black Provence	Excellent Bordeaux fig with raspberry flavor and has uncommon sweetness. Many layers of flavor and good split resistance	Bordeaux	France
Black Tuscan	Very similar to Black Madeira in flavor. Absolutely excellent fig.	Exotic Berry	Italy
Black Zadar	Excellent flattened fig from Croatia. Uniquely shaped and flavor.	Dark Berry	Croatia
Blanche d'Argenteuil	My favorite light fig. This is a honey fig that has a fuzzy skin and has definite peach notes.	Honey	France
Blanche de Deux Saisons	Rare Adriatic (green berry). This is a rare, yet excellent, French variety that really performs. The flavor and looks are fantastic with deep green skin and blood red flesh.	Adriatic	France

Blava Flor	Blava Flor is one of the most striking figs I have ever seen. With a purple black skin and a deep purple red flesh, it reminds me of a plum. Bursting with flavor and is mid season. I don't think it would be successfully grown in the ground in the northeast- pot culture only.	Bordeaux	Spain
Blaveta Campos	This is a unique fig with blue to purple skin and dark red flesh. Exceptionally sweet when ripe. It is on the late side to ripen in the North East.	Dark Berry	Spain
Blue Celeste	This is a neat-colored Celeste variant. It doesn't ripen any earlier here and has the same flavor and size as a typical Celeste.	Sugar
Bordissot Blanca Negra	This is a variegated yellow and green fig that seems to lose the stripe definition as it ripens. Very intense red pulp. It is mid to late ripening in PA.	Adriatic	Spain
Bordissot Negra Rimada	This late fig is worth the wait as its yellow and green variegation turn to red stripes that usually turn to all purple during ripening. Nice red flesh and excellent flavor. Neat looking fig.	Exotic Berry	Spain
Bourjasotte Gris	An excellent syrupy squatty fig with bluish to grey skin and deep red pulp. Mid-season ripening and seems to be pretty split resistant.	Dark Berry	France
Brogiotto Nero	Very delicious Bordeaux type fig. Very pretty and nice rich flavor. Not sure about hardness for this one as we've only grown in a pot for years.	Bordeaux	Italy
Bryant Dark	An unknown discovered in New York. It is very winter resistant and productive. A typical Mt. Etna fig with above average production.	Dark Berry	Italy
Burgan Unk	This is an excellent flavored fig with fruity notes and sweet flavor. It is a medium sized fig and ripens mid season. The skin is red to purple and the flesh is strawberry red. Very delicious fig. The only drawback is its resistance to putting on fruit. You really need to pinch to get figlets to form. It is an extremely vigorous grower.	Exotic Berry
Byadi	This is a good honey fig from Syria. It seems to be similar to White Marsailles.	Honey	Syria
C'est Bon	This is a French fig that is an heirloom variety in Louisiana. It is dark with red interior and has good resistance to splitting.	Dark Berry	France
Calderona	This is an excellent exotic berry fig. It has some similarities to Black Madeira, but is smaller, bursting with flavor, and has very little splitting issues. We had this one some years back, but it died. Consider pot culture only if you are in the northeast or somewhere with very cold winters.	Exotic Berry	Spain
Campaniere	Excellent flavor and is an early fig.	Adriatic	France
Capoll Curt Negra	Great Spanish fig that is mid-season. Very sweet.	Dark Berry	Spain
Cardeal	This is a new variety for us. We did ripen a handful of medium-sized brownish red-skinned figs. They were sweet with light berry flavor.	Dark Berry	Portugal
Carini	English brown turkey type, sweet flavor, hardy and productive	Sugar	Italy
Carmelitana	This is a good dark berry fig with non typical leaf pattern for a Mt. Etna type, but has excellent, rich flavor and is a great patio type fig due to its dwarfy growing habit and unique leaves.	Dark Berry	Italy
Casticeddah	This is a new variety for us. I am not sure if it is common. Supposedly it is, but all of the figs dropped from my tree this year. It could be that it is because it is very young and fragile.	Dark Berry	Italy
Catalan	We ripened a few of these from our very young tree. They were dark purple-skinned and had a lighter red color. It seems to be a textbook Bordeaux fig with a lot of complexity.	Bordeaux	Spain
Cavaliere	Very unique variety. I liken it to Smith in some ways. The skin can be any number of colors based on ripening time and exposure to sunlight. Cherry red interior.	Adriatic	Italy
Chiappetta	This is an English Brown Turkey-type sugar fig with some really bizarre shapes. It can even have varying skin color. The flavor is pretty melon sweet and is pretty refreshing, rather than too sugary sweet like some. I have this one in the ground and it produces well. I spoke with the owner (source) of this one and he said his family brought it to western PA in 1903 and it has been here ever since. Neat story and good, hardy fig.	Sugar	Italy
Chicago Hardy	An old standard. The first marketed Mt. Etna fig with good flavor and mid season ripening.	Dark Berry	Italy
Chincoteague Celeste	This is a discovery by Lou Monti. It is an excellent extra large celeste with a distinct berry flavor. We both love it. The mother tree is immense. Excellent figs that do not split.	Sugar
Col de Dame Blanc	This is an excellent fig with a great colors, sweetness and hang time	Adriatic	France/Spain
Col de Dame Blanca-Negra	This is a neat variety as some fruits can be yellow and some can have a bluish striped dark pattern. It seems to be sort of early (by a few weeks) than most CdDs. CdDGris is the only one ripening earlier. Very rain resistant for splitting. Excellent flavor.	Exotic Berry	France/Spain
Col de Dame Cuitat	This is a new variety for us. This is in the Col de Dame family and is supposed to have the typical strong berry flavor with good sweetness.	Exotic Berry	Spain
Col de Dame Gris	Intense dark berry flavor. Later variety with tight eye, grey blue skin with many layers of flavor. This is my favorite of all the Col de Dame series. It really ripens at least 2-3 weeks before Blanc. I have it in the ground and it is extremely vigorous. It also ripens a fair amount of fruit as well, despite being late.	Dark Berry	France
Col de Dame Mutante	Really interesting variety with remarkable colors. Usually is a red and purple striped fig, sometimes keeping thin yellow striping against the black skin. Deep red intense flavored flesh. It is just too bad it is late ripening.	Exotic Berry	Spain
Col de Dame Noir	Excellent dark fig. Resists splitting very well and is absolutely delicious. It is a late variety and would have to be grown in a pot in cold climates like mine.	Dark Berry	France/Spain
Col de Dame Rimada (reverted)	This is another variegated yellow and green variety, similar to panache, but better split resistance (much better) and has the textbook longer "neck". Excellent, but late. My plant has reverted, so it would be closer to a CdDB, since the stripes would be gone.	Adriatic	Spain
Col de Dame Roja	Very similar to CdDG with a more red color on the skin.	Dark Berry	Spain
Colonel Littman's Black Cross	Excellent, top tier fig with outstanding flavor. (Our favorite overall fig!) Very complex berry flavor, beautiful black fig with tight eye. It is on the late side, so Northern growers should grow in a pot.	Exotic Berry
Columbaro Nero	This variety seems to be in the Sal's Corleone/Palermo Red family. Red skin, pink pulp, little seed content. Did not split despite having large eye. Sweet and seems to be fairly hardy. Medium to late ripening.	Sugar	Italy
Conde	This variety seems to be similar to a Mt. Etna type fig but also seems to be an upgrade – like a Red Lebanese Bekka Valley or Norella, in which the flavor profile is superior.	Dark Berry	France
Constantine de Algerie	This is a massive yellow fig. It oozes honey flavor and is usually around 100 grams. This is a productive tree as well.	Honey	Algeria
Constans	This is a new variety for us (source Ross) and is supposed to be an early ripener with bluish-grey coloring with red interior. Some speculate it could be related to Pastilliere.	Dark Berry	France
Cotio Verdeal	This is an interesting looking fig with yellow to light-green skin and red pulp. It is not your traditional Adriatic fig. It seems to be more of a sugar fig from the small sample I have had so far.	Adriatic	Portugal
Craven's Craving	Very similar to Black Madeira but supposedly has less of a splitting problem with slightly larger fruit. I have not ripened enough of these to confirm.	Exotic Berry	Azores

Crosne	This variety is supposedly from Spain and was discovered in Crosne, France. It seems to be an Adriatic fig. I have had it for a few years now and has some berry notes and is mid to late season ripening. It has aborted a lot of figs, and seems to be a bit smaller than Adriatic JH, and we've had less splitting issues with this variety. Edit: 2023 It has dropped the majority of figs this year. I am not sure why.	Adriatic	France/Spain
Crozes	This is an FDM introduction. It appears to be a Mt. Etna variant. It is rather new to us.	Dark Berry	France
Cul Noir	This is an French fig that usually has either sugar spots or darkening at the base of the base. It seems similar to Sucrette and has great sweetness.	Honey	France
Dall'Oso	Dark fig from Italy. Many of these end up as mule figs (like a girdle that produces two halves). There is nothing wrong with the flavor of the mule figs other than appearance. They are medium to large and have a red flesh. They have a nice berry flavor. It has done very well against our cold winters thus far.	Dark Berry	Italy
Cuore di Bue	This is an outstanding Adriatic fig that is similar to Dalmatie. I like this one better because it ripens more uniformly than most other Dalmatie types.	Adriatic	Italy
Da Ponte	Large green fig with red interior. Resists splitting better than most other Adriatic types. Very productive and easy to root.	Adriatic	Portugal
Dahrouge	This was a dark berry fig found in DuBois, PA, which has very cold winters and is of Lebanese origin. It is very productive. I think it is a good choice for the Northeast. Mine is in ground and is always productive, even after cold winters.	Dark Berry	Lebanon
Dalmatie	This is one big fig. It can reach close to 100 grams and is an excellent, large adriatic (green berry) fig. Pretty green skin, dark blood red interior. Good choice for cooler climates.	Adriatic	Croatia
Dark Portuguese	Great Mt. Etna fig with great winter resistance and high productivity. Discovered in-ground in Bethlehem, PA.	Dark Berry	Portugal
De La Caseta	This is a nice light green skinned fig that is above average in size. Sweet berry flavor with a nice thick skin. We have grown it in the ground here and it is vigorous but takes damage in the winter. It is on the late side.	Adriatic	Spain
De La Plata	A somewhat flattened green fig with strawberry pulp. It was decent for me this season, but not outstanding.	Adriatic	Spain
De La Roca	This is a late fig but is wonderful. It is complex and syrupy. It seems to resist splitting and is usually of good size. If you have the room (in pots for the North East), it would be a nice addition. I have it in the ground unprotected and it does ripen a fair amount of figs before frost each year.	Adriatic	Spain
De Tres Esplets	This fig is similar to Ronde de Bordeaux, and even ripens at the same time. The significant difference seems to be its superior resistance to splitting. I also feel that it seems to be more productive. RdB seems a little shy to produce. DTE seems much more productive (at least what I have observed over three seasons of comparison).	Bordeaux	Spain
Del Cor	This one is a must have for the collector. It is a dark fig with raspberry-like flavor that is one of the most intense berry figs I have ever had. It is mid-season and quite productive. I don't think it would be successfully grown in the ground in the Northeast – pot culture only.	Dark Berry	Spain
Del Sen Jaume Gran	I have said this before, but I think DSJG reminds me of a larger, green equivalent of an I-258 or Black Madeira. It is an extra large fig that often splits (I think due to its size and shape) however seldom spoils. I am not sure why, but it is a pleasant surprise. A massive green fig with strawberry flesh. It is on the late side, but in a pot it is outstanding and does ripen most of its crop before frost.	Exotic Berry	Spain
Des Roig Manyo	This is a new variety for us. No data other than it is a Pons fig and has yellow skin with a hue and red interior. It is said to be very sweet and has berry flavor. Description from Des Roig Manyo plant product on Shopify: A Pons variety that produces small gold to bronze (with some banding of purple) figs with red berry interior. They have been on the late side for us, but are very sweet and seem to resist splitting so far.	Adriatic	Spain
Dr. Gowaty	A large green fig with a syrupy amber to pink center. The breba are immense. Supposedly brought by a medical doctor in Israel when he moved to the US. It is a ball of honey when overripe. It is also mid season ripening.	Sugar	Israel
East Chester Black	Great black fig found just outside of NYC. Good winter resistance.	Dark Berry
Exquisito	This has been either top fig, or at least top 3 this year. Wow! I think it runs circles around Thermalito, in my opinion. It resisted splitting better and has a much more complex berry flavor. It ripens a little late, but the ripening window is very short, so I was able to ripen all of the fruit before the first frost. I absolutely love this fig!	Exotic Berry
Falls Gold	Falls Gold is a dark yellow fig, almost bronze, and is a decent size. They are very sweet and berry like. Red flesh. Mid season ripener so far.	Honey/Berry
Fehmarn	This is an English Brown Turkey type fig from the Island of Fehmarn, Germany. It has been growing in the ground for me the last 6 years. It is pretty winter resistant and produces double figs per node on many of the branches. They are sweet figs and begin ripening mid September here in ground unprotected. They are late-August ripening in a pot here.	Sugar	Germany
Fico Cerreto	This is an Italian fig that appears to be San Pedro (Breba only). It seems to be an interesting fig with a thick very sweet flavor. This variety also can have a drop of honey on the eye to help prevent splitting. Harvey has described the flavor as slightly melon like.	Sugar	Italy
Fico Palazzo	This is a new fig for us from Harvey. It seems to be a large Adriatic fig. No data yet.	Adriatic	Italy
Fico San Pietro	This is a really good almost exotic flavored fig. Black in color with red pulp. We don't have this one in the ground just yet, so we don't have any hardiness data.	Dark Berry	Italy
Fico Secco	This is an excellent elongated dark fig. It is not very large, but packs a punch on flavor. It is very concentrated and complex. It has an earlier ripening time than some of the dark berry figs. It may be the same or similar to Moro de Caneva.	Exotic Berry	Italy
Figoin	This is one of my favorite figs for appearance – yellow-green with deep red flesh. It is a tiny fig bursting with flavor. Interesting as well is how early it is. I tried growing in-ground with no protection and it was the best of my new plantings with zero dieback (it was a mild winter, however). Each of the other newly planted trees had significant dieback. Interesting. This is the only one plant I will be selling this season as I am not planning to do any air layering.	Adriatic	Italy
Figue De Parfum	This was a delight for me last year. It was a juicy yellow honey fig. I ripened a lot of them and they were all very good. I know there was some talk about it being a San Pedro fig, but the ones ripened last year were most certainly main crop figs. It was mid season. A keeper for sure.	Honey	France
Figue Jaune	An interesting Adriatic fig with a larger, squattier appearance. I have enjoyed the fruit as it is a little different than most adriatics in size shape and color.	Adriatic	France
Florea	One of the earliest ripening figs. Good flavored fig with excellent hardiness / very good winter resistance to dieback. For 7 years this has been the first fig to ripen. It is a heavy producer despite its moderate growing habit. A must have for cold climates.	Dark Berry	Romania
Frank's Salerno	Big, sweet fig that is juicy and rich. This is a complex sugar fig. This is a very vigorous variety.	Sugar	Italy
Galicia Negra	Outstanding Bordeaux fig that is slow to fruit but is a must-have in a pot.	Bordeaux	Spain
Garnsey White Seedless	This is a nice jelly like fig with strong sweetness and mild flavor. It is quite productive and has decent winter resistance.	Honey
Genovese Nero AF	This is Adriano's version which a lot of folks agree is probably I-258. It is definitely in that Black Madeira family and is really among the Cadillac of figs. Late producing, just like the others, it is probably best suited for pot culture in the Northeast and short season climates.	Exotic Berry	Italy

Giant Black German	This is a massive fig and is probably related to the California Brown Turkey. It has good sweetness when properly ripened. We are finally offering it after growing it for 7 years because it did not have major splitting issues and ripened late mid season. I think it has some potential, especially if one likes exceptionally large figs.	Sugar	Germany
Gino's Black	Great Italian variety that is very productive and flavorful. A Mt. Etna type, so it is dependable and has good winter resistance.	Dark Berry	Italy
Godfather	A fig from the movie The Godfather. Excellent history and tasty fig. If you google it you will find the whole history from the man, Coop.	Sugar	Italy
Golden Rainbow	Very confusing story...This was once called Ben's Golden Riverside because it resembled the true golden riveside UCD. Ben was the collector who found it. The name then was changed. The important thing is that it is excellent. Extra large figs that are usually over 100 grams. Mid season ripener and they are very sweet like honey. I strongly believe it may be the same or similar to Yellow Long Neck	Honey
Golden Riverside	This is an excellent honey fig that is large to extra large and is mid season ripening. I have it in the ground and it does well.	Honey
Grantham's Royal	This is a San Pedro fig (meaning only Breba production) for those of us outside the fig wasp zone. It is a delicious fig though, which is why it is the only San Pedro fig left in my collection.	Sugar
Graz - Der Grosse Feige (BC#102)	I love this fig! Maybe it is because it was a Belclare Nursery fig, and maybe because it was sourced from the city of Graz, Austria near the historical landmark town clock. And maybe it is because it is a nice meaty red fig with good sweetness. It is a slow grower. I thought about putting it in the ground here in PA and still may. Graz seems like zone 7a, so it may work pretty well. I also feel there is somewhat of a resemblance to Acciano, but I could be wrong.	Sugar	Austria
Green Michurinska	This is an earlier adriatic type. I have only grown it for 5 years. The fruit does ripen earlier than other adriatics, but so far, it has only been about two weeks, but even a few weeks can make a difference in total fruit ripening. The wood for these cuttings is great because while growing GM in the ground, it gives thicker cuttings with a lot of energy.	Adriatic	Eastern Europe
Green Nazareth	This is an interesting small green fig introduced by Trees of Joy. We've only ripened a few so far, so there is not a lot of sharable data yet.	Adriatic
Grigio	I have a few of these in different locations in the ground. They all survived the winter of 2022-2023 pretty well and produced some monster figs. I thought they were definitely in the Longue d' Aout family. I am not so sure now, as they have a larger size and more pear like shape. The flavor is a little more syrupy and fruity. I think this is a good candidate for the north east.	Dark Berry	Italy
Gris de St. Jean	This is a pale yellow fig with grey-blue stripes which dominate the overall skin color. It had done fairly well in ground for us but is late to ripen this way. Recommended potted culture for cold climates. Excellent sweet berry flavor.	Sugar / Light Berry	France
Grosse Monstreuse Di Liperi	Excellent yellow-green fig with blood red interior. Often, a drop of honey will block the ostiole preventing any splitting or spoiling. It is mid season and has enormous interesting leaves. Excellent berry flavor.	Adriatic	Italy
Guilbeau	Supposedly from France and brought to Louisiana, this fruit is a good flavored sugar fig. I have not gotten as large fruits as Bass, but they are a nice size. It could be that his photo is of the breba, but I am not sure. The main crop figs have mild flavor and seem to resist splitting fairly well.	Sugar	France
Gypsy Gold	This is an heirloom variety from Mississippi. It has an interesting growing pattern and leaf shape. It is a honey fig and ripens later in the season. It would be a good choice for a southern climate with longer season than PA.	Honey
Ham Rham	I raved about this Moroccan fig a few years ago and am equally impressed by it this year. I liken it to a Black Madeira, but the leaves are not characteristic of a BM type. However, it is every bit as good (in my opinion) and earlier. It is not an early fig, but ripens in September. This gives it a chance to ripen a lot more high quality figs.	Exotic Berry	Morocco
Hanc's EBT	This fig comes from Hanc Mathies and is a mystery to me. I do not think it is an English Brown Turkey type. I thought it was a Southern Brown Turkey (almost Celeste-like) but cannot be sure. It is supposedly very winter resistant. I like the taste, but its small size and lack of vigor, are what is holding it back from being a stand out.	Sugar
Hardy Pittsburgh	This was in the collection of Encanto Farms in CA. My family is from Pittsburgh so I wanted to try it. It is a good Mt. Etna fig and is also the second earliest ripening out of 50 Mt. Etnas. Only Syrian Dark is earlier. It is a workhorse-very productive and has good winter resistance. I would highly recommend for Northern growers.	Dark Berry
Hative d' Argenteuil	This French fig comes from near Paris. I absolutely love its complexity and interesting appearance. It has been fairly early the last few years. I have some hope that it may do well in ground, due to its early ripening.	Dark Berry	France
Hog Island	This fig comes from the barrier island in VA. I believe it to be a Brunswick type. Mine splits pretty bad when it rains, so although winter resistant, the souring is an issue here. I think in a warm, dry climate, it would do very well. If the figs don't split, they are melon like in flavor, large in size, and the leaves are very interesting.	Sugar
Hunt	This is an odd ball sugar fig with elongated shape. It has interesting leaves and good sweet flavor.	Sugar
I-258	An absolute top tier fig. I think it may be a top two or three fig for me out of over 300 varieties. Same terrific flavor as Black Madeira, but has a shorter ripening season. So, while late season, they ripen more consistently than Black Madeira. *I have ripened most of the entire crop in 2022 and 2023 in the ground here in PA unprotected. It is plausible that you could grow this variety in ground here with some good years. It has been excellent in the ground here. Additionally, the wood from the trees make better cuttings (in my experience) than anything in a pot. The cuttings are of very good quality and thickness and will give the best chance of rooting.	Exotic Berry	Italy
Impellizari	This is a monster sugar fig that I believe is a California Brown Turkey variant. Very sweet and refreshing. It also is pretty complex with some fruity notes to it. I imagine that in ground would be possible in the mid Atlantic, but I would worry about splitting issues and it is a little later than I would like for ripening most of the crop.	Sugar	Italy
Improved Celeste	Very early sugar fig. A must-have for the NE. I have it in-ground and it does well. Long neck and interesting appearance.	Sugar
Iranian Candy	This is an excellent honey fig. It is very sweet. It is not very vigorous. It is a stand out due to its early ripening. It is the second earliest honey fig after unk yellow Greek. If you are looking for an excellent honey fig to grow in the ground in the northeast, or in cold climates, this is your best bet.	Honey	Iran
Irene's Black Greek	Dennis introduced this Black Madeira type fig. It seems to be excellent. I purchased a tree of it from Dan F. I only was able to harvest a few cuttings of it.	Exotic Berry	Greece
Ischia Black	Ischia Black is probably my favorite Bordeaux-type fig. I purchased cuttings from Herman (Vasile) 4 years ago. It was pretty rare before that. His strain was very healthy. It is phenomenal and resists splitting very well. It has the most concentrated flavor of any of my Bordeaux's.	Bordeaux	Italy
Italian Black (Becnel's)	This is a Bordeaux fig that is on the late side, but is excellent. It is extremely complex and you can eat a lot of them without getting sick of them. Smooth black skin (with bloom sometimes), strawberry flesh. Very few splitting issues. I have had mixed success with this variety in the ground in the north east. This year it had very little dieback, but my first mother tree died after one year.	Bordeaux	Italy
JFE Black Madeira (not)	I am not sure what this is. It was a mislabeled bunch of trees at Just Fruits & Exotics nursery in 2014. It is excellent. It is on the late side and very vigorous. I really don't think it is LSU Scott's Black. I have LSU Scott's black and the fruit is definitely inferior to this one. The fruit shape is also different. Really a great tasting fig.	Exotic Berry
Joualle Noir	This is a delicious dark berry fig. It is slow to grow and produce, but after two years, I have sampled a few excellent figs from the mother tree.	Dark Berry	France
Joualle Rouge	This is a nice adriatic type fig. This is a green fig with blood red pulp. It is a late season ripener, but has a tight ripening window. Moderate winter resistant.	Adriatic	France
Keddie	This fig was found in Pittsburgh. It is a Mt Etna and is currently being grown in the ground here at the nursery. The last five years, it has performed very well.	Dark Berry

Kesariani	Excellent black fig from Athens, Greece. Early-mid season variety. Very rich and complex. Very vigorous and winter resistant.	Dark Berry	Greece
La Bourgeois	This French fig is very good. It may get even better over time. I have not had a breba, but the main crop is very sweet and fruity. It has been mid season (to late) and has been very productive.	Dark Berry	France
La Magdeleine	Early small honey fig with very sweet flavor. Yellow skin and amber flesh.	Honey	France
Labritja	This is a large green fig with dark pink flesh. I think it may be related to the Atreano family.	Exotic Berry	Spain
Lampeira Preta	This is a San Pedro fig and it is quite large. It was a new variety for us and one that we will keep an eye out for over the next few years. We generally don't keep San Pedro type figs due to only getting breba crops only.	Sugar	Portugal
Lampeira Prusch	This is a Portuguese fig that has a unique flavor and very nice size. Splitting has not been a problem here, but the mother tree is still very young.	Exotic Berry	Portugal
Longue d' Aout	Nice extra large elongated fig with excellent complex flavor. Visually appealing and mid-season ripening.	Dark Berry	France
LSU DC-2	This one has an interesting story. The LSU Ag students had a fig tree test site and there was a dead cat laying in the field. So DC-2 meant that this specimen was the second tree from the dead cat. College humor, folks. The fig itself is very good. It is mid season to late in the ground and has done very well in the cold winters here. It seems almost like an EBT type with sugary sweetness. Interesting story and an interesting fig.	Sugar
LSU Hollier	This is one of the sweetest figs I own. Resists splitting and just an excellent honey fig.	Honey
LSU Purple	Good sugar fig with purple skin and amber flesh. Interesting shaped fruit that resists splitting and gets better with age. Early and productive. It seems to get better with age. Some people sampling my figs this year thought it was one of the best of the bunch.	Sugar
LSU Red	This is a sugar fig that has is mid-season and was an LSU Ag program release. These are good quality figs that resist splitting.	Sugar
LSU Scott's Yellow	Very sweet and somewhat complex fig. Early- to mid-ripening. Can split with a lot of rain.	Honey
LSU Tiger	One of our favorite LSU varieties, probably the favorite. Sweet sugar fig with some berry notes as well. Large fig that resists splitting very well.	Dark Berry
Luv	This Bordeaux fig is very intense. With almost a blue skin, it is unique. The fruit is small-medium and is mid- to late-season. Very thick skin and resists splitting very well.	Bordeaux	Italy
Lyndhurst White	Green sugar fig extremely large figs, very productive and responds well to dieback	Sugar
Macool	Syrian dark berry fig that is a great utility fig – tasty, hardy, productive, resists splitting.	Dark Berry	Syria
Madeira Island Black	Another KK discovery. It is very similar to Black Madeira and may be slightly larger. Excellent exotic flavor.	Exotic Berry	Portugal
Madeleine des deux Saisons	This French fig has been quite good. Has not been super productive, but good quality figs. They are medium to large and have a good sugar flavor. Seems almost Brunswick like, but the interior is darker and they resist splitting much better.	Sugar	France
Makedonia Dark	Very dependable Mt. Etna type fig with very good flavor and winter resistance. Dark berry fig, extremely productive and early. Responds extremely well to dieback.	Dark Berry	Macedonia
Malone	Excellent Bordeaux type fig. Mid season black fig with a raspberry flavor flesh. It is extremely resistant to splitting in rain. This variant also has good winter resistance as it was discovered in the ground in Allentown, PA.	Bordeaux	Italy
Malta Black	Malta Black is an early dark berry fig. Some categorize it as a Mt. Etna, while others don't (due to its early ripening and flavor profile). I think it is excellent. A great choice for short growing season climates.	Dark Berry	Malta
Manresa	This is shy to produce anything until year three or four. However, the figs are excellent and it eventually becomes very prolific. I think it is very closely related to Noire de Caromb or Kathleen's Black.	Bordeaux	Spain
Mario #48 Castel Trosino	This is a large black fig that Mario introduced to the fig community. Beautiful dark red pulp. I think this may be a hot variety moving forward because it seems to be unique and apparently fairly early. My tree from Dan F. is still very young, so I will have to collect more data on it.	Exotic Berry	Italy
Mario #50 Casa di Lazzaro	Casa di Larazzo is an outstanding fig from Mario. It may be the same or similar to Italian-258. I absolutely love it. Beautiful figs and unbeatable flavor. It is a little on the late side (like all black Madeira types) but is worth the wait and effort.	Exotic Berry	Italy
Maroc-23	This is a new fig for us. It is supposedly a large red fig with dark pink flesh. No data yet to report.	Sugar	Morocco
Maroc Noir	This variety has dropped a lot of its figs over the last few years. I think it may be a smyrna type. If you are in the fig wasp area, it would be a good candidate, but I think I would pass if you are not in that zone.	Dark Berry	Morocco
Marseillaise	These figs have been small for me-a little larger than Celeste. The have a sweet flavor and distinct leaves. However, a few of them did split pretty badly in the remnants of a hurricane last year, so I will watch for any splitting issues this season and edit if needed.	Honey	France
Marseilles Black VS	One of the most dependable Mt. Etna types that really has excellent winter resistance and is super productive.	Dark Berry	France
Martinenca Rimada	Excellent flavored fig with the interesting variegation makes this a must have fig. It is on the late side but yellow and green stripes become red and purple upon ripening. It is a neat fig to look at and eat.	Exotic Berry	Spain
Mavra Sika	Excellent black fig which is hardy and is more complex than most Mt. Etna types. This one is Greek.	Dark Berry	Greece
Medieval Yvoire	This is an excellent Adriatic fig with very deep red pulp and chewy green skin. It has been a moderate grower, but the ripened figs are really good.	Adriatic	France
Michael Grace Mystery	The late, great fig collector Michael Grace found this fig down in Baltimore many years ago. He was apparently really excited about it. For those who knew Michael, he was careful with his finds and was selective with whom he shared varieties with. My friend Dan from Md was lucky enough to be a recipient of this find. Dan kept it for about ten years before meeting me last year. He brought me a nice sized tree to see if I could identify it. I can say it has some characteristics of a Mt. Etna fig, but the figs are considerably larger and they have a slightly flattened bottom. Additionally, the flavor is absolutely bursting with sweet berry flavor. They were earlier than any of my Mt. Etnas as well. The tree is also supposed to be quite hardy. This is an exciting find, and I thank Dan C. for sharing it with me. I hope many can enjoy this variant .	Dark Berry
Mig Paratjal	This is a newer fig for us, but it has produced some very good figs. Mine has a lighter pulp than I typically see (although a lot of those appear caprifigged). It is supposedly prone to splitting.	Honey/Berry	Spain
Mittica White	I think this one is in the Atreano family. It seems to split less and have more concentrated flavor. A lot of Atreano types seem to be a little watery for me. This one usually packs a punch. It is a large green fig with pink pulp. It is extremely vigorous and seems to hold up in the winter. It was found outside of Pittsburgh.	Sugar	Italy
Moro di Caneva	This has been an excellent fig for us. I have it in the ground and it really held up against the winter so far. It is an elongated puple skinned fig with reddish flesh. It has excellent flavor and is on the early side. This is one to watch as I think it would make an excellent choice for the northern grower.	Dark Berry	Italy
Moellada	A new fig for us but have had a few fruits from it this fall. Really tasty medium sized deep red to purple skin. Nice red flesh. It was very sweet and fruity. It also seemed berry-like. It is still in a pot, so we don't have any hardness information yet.	Dark Berry	Spain
Morro de Bou	This is a new variety for us. Supposedly a rich green-skinned fig with deep red pulp. No data to this point.	Adriatic	Spain
Moscatel Branco	This is a sweet honey fig. I think it may be a synonym for Pingo de Mel, meaning honey drop. It has been a mid season ripener in a pot. No data on in ground yet.	Honey	Portugal

Moscatel Preto	Super complex and extra large bronze-colored fig. It is a meaty fig with a jammy flavor.	Dark Berry	Portugal
Motoso Preto	Medium-to-large brown fig with good flavor and rich sweetness. It has been described as a really big celeste. Mid-season ripener and very productive.	Dark Berry	Portugal
Napolitana	This is a new addition for us and have only ripened a handful so far. It reminds me of Souadi with its striking purple skin and lighter colored pulp.	Sugar	Italy
Natalina	This is a slow grower but it is a good one. It seems to ripen fairly early. Nice sweet fruity flavor with dark skin and light red pulp.	Sugar/light berry	Italy
Navid's Dark Greek	Excellent black fig that is very similar to Azore's Dark. It usually drips honey out of the ostiole. Discovered in WV by Navid.	Dark Berry	Greece
Nefiach	Excellent French fig with a lot of complexity. It has gone through the winters here in the northeast and takes on major dieback with no protection. Green skin with deep red flesh. Very complex and jammy.	Adriatic	France
Negra d'Agde	Excellent large dark fig with rich flesh. This fig is from France and is very productive.	Dark Berry
Negretta	Excellent Bordeaux fig with outstanding flavor. Seems to ripen earlier than most late Bordeauxs.	Bordeaux
Negronne	Negronne is actually Violette de Bordeaux. It was renamed VdB when it was brought here in the US. It is an excellent firm fig with a sweet plum like flavor. It is late, so pot culture would be best for the northeast.	Bordeaux	France
Nero 600M	An excellent late Bordeaux fig. Good winter resistance but is on the late side ripening. Pot culture for NE is best.	Bordeaux	Italy
Nexoe	This is a productive English Brown Turkey type fig from Denmark. It is a shorter season fig with very good winter resistance. I have one in the ground here with no protection, and it produces each year after any (varying) dieback.	Sugar	Denmark
Niagara Black	This is a great fig for cold climates. It appears to be similar to Longue d' Aout. It seems to resist splitting better. For the past three seasons, it has had the least winter damage of all the LdA types. It is a large tear drop-shaped fig with strong berry flavor. It has a bronze-to-green color and is mid-season ripening. Highly recommend for the Northeast.	Dark Berry
Nichadam Haven (unknown)	This is a new fig from Uzbekistan. It was found growing in the northeast. It is a large Adriatic fig that is early ripening and has a very small, tight eye. Definitely one to watch.	Adriatic	Uzbekistan
Nick's Lebanese Purple Black	This is a Bordeaux type fig. It is very shy to produce (like a good number of bordeauxs). It is mid to late ripening.	Bordeaux	Lebanon
Noire de Barbentane	An excellent Bordeaux fig with a flattened shape and a blush. A bit on the late side, but an interesting delicious variety.	Bordeaux	France
Noire de Caromb	This seems to be the same as Kathleen's black. It takes years to ripen. The figs are very good, however even at maturity, the figs are pretty sparse.	Bordeaux	France
Nordland	This is the Swiss equivalent of Longue d'Aout. Very winter resistant and large figs mid season ripening.	Dark Berry	Switzerland
Norella	One of my favorite dark berry types. Sometimes leaks honey from the ostiole.	Dark Berry	Italy
Nuestra Senora del Carmen	This variety has a lot of hype behind it. It is delicious, but late. It is a decent grower and I am trialing it in the ground this year. We will see how it handles the winter.	Exotic Berry	Spain
Olympian	This is an English Brown Turkey type fig. It is a later season fig, but has a short ripening window, so it is a good choice for our cold climate with short summer season. This fig can have some peach notes when properly ripened.	Sugar
Ondata	Extra large, pyriform shaped dark sweet fig with interesting skin texture. This is one of my overall favorites. Big in size, big on taste. Complex and sweet, I am surprised that such a large fig has so much flavor. It has not been very vigorous, though.	Exotic Berry	France
Oro Bianco	For the first year, this one is not dropping. I ripened about a dozen of these. So it is common and has nice green and yellow stripes. It has gold flesh. Also, I was impressed by the fact that it was so early. Good flavor, too. 2023 Update: This tree has aborted all fruit. The year before the fruit ripened and a side branch had leaves that also had variegation. This year, 100% drop...I don't know what is happening with this fig variety.	Exotic Berry	Italy
Oro Rosado	This is a more reliable version of the Oros. This has given fruit with no dropping. The flesh is pale pink. The most exciting feature besides the variegated fruit, is that it has stood up well against the winter weather.	Exotic Berry	Italy
Palermo Red	A red-skinned sugar fig that has good flavor and has definite good hardiness in our area (we have one unprotected in PA).	Sugar	Italy
Palestine Dark	I was given this unknown fig from Mahar (Lebmark) years ago. It does well here in ground, and appears to be a Mt. Etna type dark berry fig.	Dark Berry	Palestine
Panache	A yellow and green variegated fig with red interior. A very good, but very late striped fig. It also has some splitting issues.	Adriatic	France
Paneta de Monde N-3	This is a new one for us, but looks delicious and has a tight eye. It is supposed to be very sweet with some berry notes. Yellow skin with red blush, light red interior.	Sugar	Spain
Paradiso Bronze VS	This is an excellent adriatic type. It does have a weird growth pattern and is on the late side, but the figs rarely split. This is almost a forgotten variety discovered by Herman2 many years ago.	Adriatic	Italy
Pastilliere	Early delicious fig with good winter resistance. Plum-like flavor, beautiful color. Way underrated. It will abort all figs the first few years. By the fourth year, it usually keeps half the crop. If you don't have a lot of patience, this fig is probably not for you.	Bordeaux	France
Peau Fine	This variety has really interesting leaves and is a good green to yellow fig with red pulp. I have only had a few ripe figs, but I liked them. It is extremely vigorous but a very shy producer of figs so far. Update 2023-this variety just doesn't like to put on fruit. It needs to be pinched early and often. It is really vigorous, just not very productive.	Adriatic	France
Pel De Bou	Moderate grower. Has a thick skin with a hairy texture. The figs seem to be very refreshing and not too sweet. They have also been quite early and did not split.	Sugar	Spain
Pelejo De Toro (not)	I don't know what this actually is. It was labeled as PdT, but it clearly isn't from the standard picture. This was in the Thierry collection, since my source bought direct a few years ago. It is excellent, whatever it is. It is vigorous and makes elongated, large egg shaped green to yellow figs. The flesh is red and really juicy. It was one of my favorite figs of all of last year. It is a shame that it was mislabeled and will be tough to know just what it is. Update 2023-this variety continues to impress. One of the top Adriatics again this year. No splitting, large size, delicious. It is on the late side, but it remains a standout.	Adriatic
Pellegrino	Similar to Longue d' Aout but seems to resist splitting much better.	Dark Berry	Italy
Perola	Small yellow green fig with very thick sweet molasses flavor. It has a small eye and seems to be mid season ripener. This is a very vigorous grower and has done well in ground so far.	Sugar	Portugal
Peter's Honey	An old favorite. Just like the name, pure honey with drop of honey leaking from the eye to keep the bugs out. It ripens early September in a pot, later in the month when in the ground. Has good winter resistance.	Honey	Italy
Planera	An interesting dark fig with strawberry jam-like flesh. These seem to be green to purple depending when they ripen. It has done surprisingly well in the ground. I think it may be too late if no protection is given.	Dark Berry	Spain
Pop's Purple	Pop's Purple came from the old Belleclare nursery on Long Island (BC#17). It is a rich black fig (dark berry) that has shown good winter resistance.	Dark Berry	Italy
Preto Porches	This is a new variety for us. I am told that it is not precocious and will take years to produce. No data.	Sugar	Portugal
Princesa	This is a Pons fig and it is a textbook honey fig. It is sweet and light. It is new to us, so there is limited data to this point.	Honey	Spain
Qudssaya	This is a very sweet yellow Syrian fig with pinkish pulp. It is on the large size and is mid season. It has done very well in ground here and has done a good job of resisting splitting.	Sugar	Syria

Randino	This is a wonderful variety that doesn't really fit into one particular flavor category. It is a platypus. I thought it may be EBT but doesn't share many similarities with that family. It does have a chewy skin and brown sugar flavor. It is mid-season and produces large fruit. It is productive and has been tested in Ukraine with good success. I don't know why it isn't talked about more. An excellent fig that is fairly unusual. This fig was originally discovered in TX, and was then brought to Ukraine for trialling. The figs are large: 60-80 grams+. It has a few similarities to LdA, but the skin and especially the interior are much lighter. It is more a sugar fig than berry.	Sugar
Raspberry Latte	Excellent Bordeaux type fig that gets its name from the Raspberry finishing flavor.	Bordeaux
Ravin De Calce	Unique flavor and interesting appearance. It has done very well in the ground with no protection. Vigorous grower, mid season.	Dark Berry	France
Red Lebanese (Bekaa)	This is one of my faves in the dark berry category. It is from the Bekaa Valley in Lebanon and has almost a cherry-like flavor, very interesting. It is not the average Mt. Etna fig. I have two in the ground, and so far they have produced both years after dieback. A good top-shelf dark berry fig.	Dark Berry	Lebanon
Red Israel	This is a good sugar fig with light berry. It does seem to me to be a brown Turkey. It is better than a lot of them. It is large but unlike a lot of BTs, it has a good depth of flavor. No hardness data.	Sugar	Israel
Red Libya	This is a find from KK in Northern NJ. It is hard to classify as it is not a classic Mt Etna type. It is larger and usually a lighter color.	Dark Berry	Libya
Red Sicilian	Nice large red to purple fig. It has been very winter resistant. The figs are sweet and mid to late season.	Dark Berry	Italy
Rigata Rossa	This is a delicious fig. It is green with some purple markings. Dark red flesh and fairly large sized. The pulp is not as red as most Adriatics.	Adriatic	Italy
Rigato de Salento PB	A delicious variegated yellow and green fig with an amber to pink pulp. Not a splitter like Panache. Also is an earlier ripener.	Exotic Berry	Italy
Rockaway Green	Excellent Adriatic (green skin, blood-red interior) fig with very tight eye and very good resistance to splitting.	Adriatic	Italy
Rocky's Fig	This was a Belleclare Nursery fig that seems to be a dark berry Mt. Etna-type. I have only had a few of these, but seems to be in that family and suitable for short season climates. The figs have been very small vs. most Mt. Etnas. It may be that it is being grown in a pot.	Dark Berry	Italy
Ronde de Bordeaux	This unique fig has striking beauty and delicious, almost raspberry flavor. It has a thin jet-black skin with strawberry interior. This is an excellent choice for the Northeast because it is very early. It is probably one of the earliest figs to ripen in my collection. It can split with rain, but that is it's only flaw.	Bordeaux	France
Rose Esmeralda	This was a good surprise for me this season. It resisted splitting better than most of my other trees during some pretty drenching rains in September	Adriatic	Spain
Rossellino	Excellent small berry flavored fig that is extremely sweet. Pure jam. I did not experience the acidity that some have, but the few I tried, I really enjoyed.	Dark Berry	Italy
Rosso di Goni	We have had this variety for two years and it hasn't fruited to date. I think it probably requires the fig wasp. Probably Southern CA ONLY.	Sugar	Italy
Rubado	I love this fig. It truly has an acidity to it that reminds me of a jolly rancher. It is so unique, including the purple and green skin which typically has cracking. A very photogenic fig. Only drawback is that it is quite late. I usually get production in October. The figs are excellent, but I don't get many to fully ripen.	Exotic Berry	Italy
Sal's	Very good for in-ground growing. It is very productive and dependable.	Dark Berry	Italy
Salviotte	This is a new fig to me but seems to ripen mid season, is very sweet, and juicy and is on the small side.	Honey	France
Sangre de Caballo	An FDM variety, this seems similar to Palermo Red.	Sugar	Spain
Sanguinato	A Greek fig that is confirmed to be common and has a dark skin and deep red pulp. It is a mid to late ripener and is much different than a Mt Etna type. It does have good berry flavor, but the skin is almost on the purple red side and the skin is tougher. It is also considerably larger in size. The eye is large, which bothers me a bit when we do get rain. This is a relatively new fig for us, so we will update as we get some ripe figs from it after some rain.	Dark Berry	Greece
Sant Augusti	This has been so-so for me in PA. It may get better, but I haven't loved it here so far. Probably in the south it would be a good candidate.	Bordeaux	France
Siblawi	This fig has not been super productive for me, but the figs are really sweet and delicious. It is mid season ripening.	Sugar	Syria
Sister Madeline's Dark	This is a good fig from Charlie's Sister Madeline collection. It ripens pretty well in the ground, but is on the late side.	Dark Berry
Smith	Incredible fruity-flavored fig with many different colors upon ripening. Top 5 fig for us!	Exotic Berry	Croatia
Socorro Black	Unique flavor and pretty fig. It may be a candidate for in-ground as it is mid-season and a very special fig.	Exotic Berry
Sodus Sicilian	Very sweet fig with good winter resistance. Found near Rochester, NY. It has a pleasant peachy flavor when ripe. Mid- to late-season fig.	Sugar	Italy
Souadi	Excellent black variety from Lebanon. The interior is amber-almost clear, which is pretty rare for a black fig. The flavor is excellent with fruity notes and is very sweet. It also is reportedly quite winter resistant.	Dark Berry	Lebanon
St. Anthony	Honey-sweet yellow fig. Early ripening, thick skinned variety with good rain resistance.	Honey	Italy
St. Germaine	This is a new variety from FDM. It is a historical fig and is a large seemingly Adriatic type fig. No data.	Adriatic	France
St. Jerome	This is a Palermo Red/Sal's Corleone family member. Nice size sugar fig with little splitting issues. It is a vigorous grower and produces late in the ground here in PA.	Sugar
St. Peter's	St. Peter's comes from the Abruzzo region and is a shiney bronze fig. It is sweet and creamy. It was once sold through Just Fruits and Exotics, but they don't have it any longer. It is split-resistant and is mid-season ripening.	Sugar	Italy
Strawberry Verte	This is an Adriatic fig that is moderately hardy and is very vigorous. I think it is the same as Verte, but just has a snazzier name.	Adriatic
St. Rita	These Mt. Etna type figs are what most people are used to and have great complex strawberry sweet flavor. These are generally hardy and early producing. With dark skin and thick rich syrupy flesh, the dark berry figs are a standout.	Dark Berry	Italy
Stella	Stella is most likely Dalmatie. It is a large, tear drop shaped adriatic fig. I really like it, but if you have Dalmatie, you probably don't need this one, too.	Adriatic	Italy
Sucrette	Very sweet yellow fig with light pink (usually) flesh. Mid season ripening and sometimes has sugar spots.	Honey	France
Sultane	Excellent French variety that really has good complex flavor and often has a blush. Bordeaux type fig that seems to have some hardness and is sweeter than most in the flavor category	Bordeaux	France
Sunbird	This is an unknown found in TX, and seems to be an English Brown Turkey type fig. It does have that peachy flavor as well.	Sugar
Sunfire	This is a good quality dark berry fig. It was from Trees of Joy and has been very productive for me every year.	Dark Berry
Susser Georg	Unusually sweet sugar fig. Seems to have good hardness after being in the ground for 5 years. It is on the late side but a short ripening window. We get about 20 pounds or so each season.	Sugar	Austria
Sweet Joy	Excellent dark berry fig that resists splitting pretty well. Great flavor and a mid season ripener.	Dark Berry
Syrian Dark	This is my earliest ripening Mt. Etna type. I think it is a good one for the Northeast. Good berry flavor.	Dark Berry	Syria

Takoma Violet	One of my favorite dark berry figs. It is super winter-resistant and productive. It was found near Takoma Park, MD and it does really well for us in the ground.	Dark Berry
Tashkent	I have only ripened a few of these squatty green-yellow figs. They were good and interesting, but the tree is a shy producer. I am hopeful it will be more productive as time goes on.	Honey	Uzbekistan
Tauro	I have only ripened a few of these. It seems to be a rather shy producer, but the figs are enormous. Dark skin and lighter flesh. They were all sweet and refreshing.	Sugar	Italy
TC-12	This is a new varietal for us. It has aborted all of its figs, so I am wondering if it needs the fig wasp.	Dark Berry	-
Teramo	Among the earliest ripening figs with great production. Has remarkable winter hardiness. A must-have for the NE grower.	Sugar	Italy
Thermalito	This is a productive fig. I think it is good, but not fantastic. I know I am in the minority there, but it just tastes a little different from an Adriatic (green berry) fig.	Exotic Berry
Tia Antonio	This is a new variety that we got from Harvey. No fig production to date.	Dark Berry	Italy
Tia Penya	This is a new variety for us. It has very dark red pulp. It has a large eye but has not had many splitting and spoiling issues. It has a green skin with some red blush striping at times.	Adriatic	Spain
TNT	This is supposedly an interesting Bordeaux type fig.	Bordeaux
Trinacria	Trinacria is an interesting fig. It is early to mid ripening and has a unique color combination. The skin is dark purple/black and the flesh is almost white. It is very sweet and the most attractive quality is its resistance to splitting. We had days of continuous rain here in August and all the figs were split and spoiled. The only ones that made it through unfazed was Trianacria. Edit: This year, when grown in the ground, all figs aborted. I am not sure why, as all the in ground trees were very productive this year. It is leading me to believe it could need the wasp? That is weird, because the year before, in a pot, there were some ripeners. For now, if you are in the wasp zone, you should be good. Outside the wasp zone, you may want to pass for now, until I collect more data on it.	Sugar	Italy
Tuvia Shehora	This is a Middle Eastern fig that can range in skin color depending where it is grown (sunlight exposure intensity) and has an amber pulp. It is a small fig that seems to resist splitting.	Sugar	Palestine / Israel
TX-BA 1	This is an excellent fig and has been compared to and even thought by some collectors to be the same as Smith. It is mid season and resists splitting. It has a very complex berry flavor.	Exotic Berry
UCR 187-25	Excellent flavor and a unique fig. I am not sure how it would do in the ground, but is a great potted variety.	Adriatic
Unk Altoona	This is a relatively new variety for me. I am really excited about this one as it was discovered in Altoona, PA, which is exceptionally cold. The mother tree was in ground unprotected. The figs are very good and unique with a huge breba crop. It also seems to be on the early side. I have not yet had any main crop figs to date.	Dark Berry
Unk Bronx (Deerhunter)	This is an unusually sweet sugar fig discovered by John-Deerhunter. It seems to be similar to Palermo Red. It is a moderately productive tree, even after colder winters in PA.	Dark Berry	Italy
Unk Fenicci	This was a fig I found at an Italian restaurant in Hershey PA. It is an English Brown Turkey type. It is very sweet and productive. I even get Breba from it some years (despite hard pruning) in the ground. It is not a very vigorous cultivar.	Sugar	Italy
Unk Hungarian	This was grown in the suburbs of Philadelphia, originally grown in Hungary. Very productive and resists splitting. It is not one of the more vigorous Mt. Etna type varieties.	Dark Berry	Hungary
Unk Italian Purple	This was purchased by us 20 years ago from an Italian man in Philly. Originally from Abruzzo.	Dark Berry	Italy
Unk Lyon	Great dark berry fig from France. It has been hardy for us in the ground with no protection. It is early as well.	Dark Berry	France
Unk Owensboro	This fig was found in Kentucky in the same zone as I am in (6b). It is a Mt. Etna type (dark berry) that does not disappoint. I have a very productive one in the ground here with no protection. This is also one of our most productive varieties. If you are interested in a workhorse fig without effort, this is it.	Dark Berry
Unk Schoeneck	Rich black fig- Mt Etna type. This fig has been growing in a small village near Denver, PA, which was surprising as this is a PA German area. The original tree is supposedly at least 80-100 years old. There is a story that it was left as a rallying landmark for the Underground Railroad, since the town, itself, was a landmark for the Underground Railroad. Down south, fig trees were very common, but here, particularly in this PA German area, they are very uncommon. I am still following the accuracy of this story.	Dark Berry
Unk Serbian White	This appears to be similar to a Brunswick type with large, egg-shaped bronze skin and light pink interior. It has resisted splitting better than most Brunswick types.	Adriatic	Serbia
Unk Sicilian Dark	Found in Leola, PA. Brought from Sicily and planted in 1972. Very hardy and productive. It is extremely vigorous and productive. Very good dark berry fig. One of the most heavy producing varieties.	Dark Berry	Italy
Unk Yellow Greek	Small in stature, large on taste. This is an excellent flavor fig with remarkable winter resistance. Found outside of NYC, we grow in the ground with very good success in PA. It is one of the consistently early ripeners.	Honey	Greece
Uzun Bogaz	Super excited for this very interesting looking fig with a 'sweet plum' flavor	Exotic Berry	Azerbaijan
Vallecalde	This is an Italian variety with good winter resistance. It is very similar to Nero 600m. It ripens a little on the late side. It should probably be protected or given an early head start if in a pot. Very vigorous variety.	Bordeaux	Italy
Vallier	This is a French fig that seems to be an English Brown Turkey type. It is very similar to Susser Georg and ripens at about the same time. I have it in the ground and it ripens most of its crop. It is on the late side, but has a short ripening time.	Sugar	France
Valoze	This is a tasty Mt. Etna fig with great winter hardiness. I got it from my friend, Juan, who thought highly of it. He said he thought it had something extra going on in terms of flavor. I think he was right.	Dark Berry	Italy
Vasilika Black	Unique dark berry fig and not a Mt. Etna by leaf shape. Also has a different flavor. May be a candidate for NE in ground variety.	Dark Berry	Greece
Vasilika Sika (Herman's)	This is an excellent Adriatic fig that stands up to the winter weather. It is late here, so pot culture is recommended.	Adriatic	Greece
Verdino Del Nord	This is a great Adriatic/sugar fig with thick green skin and light red pulp. I grow it in the ground and have had good success over the last few years. It was also remarkably early for the type. It is a winner here in the northeast. It takes on winter very well.	Adriatic	Italy
Verdolino	Interestingly shaped and full of thick jam which is very complex and sweet, Verdolino is a winner. It is delicious and was also early ripening. This is one to watch.	Adriatic	Italy
Vern's Brown Turkey	While not a true brown turkey, this sugary fig has dark skin and a light sweet pulp. This variety can withstand very cold weather and resists damage. It is mid- to late-season ripener.	Sugar
Verte	This seems to be similar to Green Ischia. A highly productive green berry fig. Five lobed leaves and ripens in September. I have it in the ground as well, but it does not yield many figs.	Adriatic	Spain
Vibo Valentia	This is an unknown from the legend Art in western PA. This is a dark berry fig with a little extra on it. It comes from Calabria, and it is a vigorous tree. Comes back from dieback to produce figs reliably every year.	Dark Berry	Italy
Violet Sepor	Very tasty dark berry fig that is very thick and jammy. Very unique flavor.	Dark Berry
Violette de Bordeaux	This is the standard of all Bordeaux figs. Technically, this is Negronne. Late fig, but worth the wait as it is a dry complex fig that is plum like in flavor and firm.	Bordeaux	France

Violette de Sollies	Large black fig from France. This is one of my overall favorites for appearance and flavor. Mid- to late-season fig with jet-black skin and strawberry pulp. Very complex flavor.	Bordeaux	France
Violette Normande	Rare French fig that is not a VdB, but has some characteristics of a Bordeaux fig with some raspberry notes.	Bordeaux	France
White Madeira #1	The standard for Adriatic types. I think it is one of the best out there. There is something extra going on with the flavor that warrants an exotic berry flavor. It resists splitting well. It also ripens a little earlier than most Adriatic figs.	Exotic Berry	Portugal
White Triana	A good Atreano type fig with more concentrated flavor and more fruit per branch than most. It also seems to resist splitting a little better. Very sweet honey flavor and mid season ripening. Has done well in the ground for the last few years.	Honey	Italy
Yellow Long Neck	Interesting shape, color and flavor. Very large fig that has potential for in-ground culture in the NE as it is mid-season.	Honey
Zrequa	I am almost certain this is a Smyrna type fig. I would only purchase if in the wasp zone. I just thought it had a cool name, so I bought it at Harvey's sale last year.	Dark Berry	Morocco
Cold-Hardy Packs Cold-Hardy Packs consist of 10 total cuttings – five (5) fig tree varieties with two (2) cuttings of each. All cuttings contained in these packs are from fig trees that have grown in-ground and unprotected here in Lancaster, PA (Zone 6B) and have fruited fairly well for a number of consecutive years. (Protection would no doubt increase yield substantially, but we have been happy with the dependable volume we get every year.) As a result of in-ground growing, the thickness of the cuttings is much better than container-grown trees – these cuttings are large, heavy and full of energy!
Collector Pack	Blava Flor » Blava Flor is one of the most striking figs I have ever seen. With a purple black skin and a deep purple red flesh, it reminds me of a plum. Bursting with flavor and is mid season. I don't think it would be successfully grown in the ground in the Northeast - pot culture only. Cavaliere » Very unique variety. I liken it to Smith in some ways. The skin can be any number of colors based on ripening time and exposure to sunlight. Cherry red interior. Ravin de Calce » Unique flavor and interesting appearance. It has done very well in the ground with no protection. Vigorous grower, mid season. Smith » Incredible fruity-flavored fig with many different colors upon ripening. Top 5 fig for us! White Madeira #1 » The standard for Adriatic types. I think it is one of the best out there. There is something extra going on with the flavor that warrants an exotic berry flavor. It resists splitting well. It also ripens a little earlier than most Adriatic figs.
Pack #1 Early & Productive Pack	Florea » One of the earliest ripening figs. Good flavored fig with excellent hardiness / very good winter resistance to dieback. For 7 years this has been the first fig to ripen. It is a heavy producer despite its moderate growing habit. A must have for cold climates. RdB » This unique fig has striking beauty and delicious, almost raspberry flavor. It has a thin jet-black skin with strawberry interior. This is an excellent choice for the Northeast because it is very early. It is probably one of the earliest figs to ripen in my collection. It can split with rain, but that is it's only flaw. Improved Celeste » This unique fig has striking beauty and delicious, almost raspberry flavor. It has a thin jet-black skin with strawberry interior. This is an excellent choice for the Northeast because it is very early. It is probably one of the earliest figs to ripen in my collection. It can split with rain, but that is it's only flaw. Teramo » Among the earliest ripening figs with great production. Has remarkable winter hardiness. A must-have for the NE grower. Red Lebanese (Bekaa Valley) » This is one of my faves in the dark berry category. It is from the Bekaa Valley in Lebanon and has almost a cherry-like flavor, very interesting. It is not the average Mt. Etna fig. I have two in the ground, and so far they have produced both years after dieback. A good top-shelf dark berry fig.
Pack #2 Sweet Pack	Black Greek » This variety was introduced by Marius in Ohio. It always does well and is one of my most dependable producers. It is a dark fig with deep red interior, mid-season ripener with great winter resistance. Graz - Der Grossen Feige (BC#102) » I love this fig! Maybe it is because it was a Belclare Nursery fig, and maybe because it was sourced from the city of Graz, Austria near the historical landmark town clock. And maybe it is because it is a nice meaty red fig with good sweetness. It is a slow grower. I thought about putting it in the ground here in PA and still may. Graz seems like zone 7a, so it may work pretty well. I also feel there is somewhat of a resemblance to Acciano, but I could be wrong" LSU Tiger » One of our favorite LSU varieties, probably the favorite. Sweet sugar fig with some berry notes as well. Large fig that resists splitting very well.. Unk Yellow Greek » Small in stature, large on taste. This is an excellent flavor fig with remarkable winter resistance. Found outside of NYC, we grow in the ground with very good success in PA. It is one of the consistently early ripeners. Yellow Long Neck » This is more of a premium variety to be included in the hardy pack collection, but it has performed very well in ground and consistently ripens gobs of extra large sweet yellow figs.
Pack #3 Workhorse Pack	Battaglia Green » Very good Adriatic type fig with good splitting resistance and is slightly earlier than most Adriatics grown in the ground here in PA. It is sort of rare to get many in ground unprotected Adriatics to ripen in this area, but this year 2023, we ripened almost half the set crop. That ended up being close to 20 pounds of fruit from the mother tree. Longue d' Aout » Nice extra large elongated fig with excellent complex flavor. Visually appealing and mid-season ripening. Makedonia Dark » Very dependable Mt. Etna type fig with very good flavor and winter resistance. Dark berry fig, extremely productive and early. Responds extremely well to dieback. Mittica White » I think this one is in the Atreano family. It seems to split less and have more concentrated flavor. A lot of Atreano types seem to be a little watery for me. This one usually packs a punch. It is a large green fig with pink pulp. It is extremely vigorous and seems to hold up in the winter. It was found outside of Pittsburgh. Susser Georg » Unusually sweet sugar fig. Seems to have good hardiness after being in the ground for 5 years. It is on the late side but a short ripening window. We get about 20 pounds or so each season.
Pack #4 Starter Pack	Adriatic JH » This is a great green fig with blood-red interior. It is a later-ripening fig but has great flavor in spite of cool weather while ripening in the fall. It also exhibits good winter resistance. Very visually stimulating. Delicious fig, vigorous. Lyndhurst White » Green sugar fig extremely large figs, very productive and responds well to dieback Peter's Honey » An old favorite. Just like the name, pure honey with drop of honey leaking from the eye to keep the bugs out. It ripens early September in a pot, later in the month when in the ground. Has good winter resistance. Unk Sicilian Dark » Found in Leola, PA. Brought from Sicily and planted in 1972. Very hardy and productive. It is extremely vigorous and productive. Very good dark berry fig. One of the most heavy producing varieties. Verte » This seems to be similar to Green Ischia. A highly productive green berry fig. Five lobed leaves and ripens in September. I have it in the ground as well, but it does not yield many figs.
