

WALKING WITH DINOSAURS

WRITTEN BY ALEX FORD
ILLUSTRATED BY JAMES BANKS

Professor Pods, our scientist inventor, is looking for somewhere brand new to venture.

“Mrs Badger, do you fancy another adventure trip?”

In no time the POD fired up with a wobble, whir and a whip

Blasting through time, with clock hands winding back

The POD came crashing down, like a burning comet, with a mighty whack

Half buried in the earth, the mound of soil so colossal

These look like decaying bones and signs of ancient fossils

“What’s that in the distance, smoking away on the skyline?”

“It’s an active volcano, with hot lava trickling down the incline.”

“Over there, a skeleton ribcage and a boulder door, that could be the way”

“Here’s some footprints, but they don’t look like ours, I have to say”

“Ooh this is so exciting, I wonder where we could be?”

“Let’s get up high and take a further look, by climbing that big tree.”

Shouting up to a high branch, “What can you see?” said Bee.

“I see a type of lizard, but walking on two legs, and roaming free.”

Professor PODS looked at Bee the badger, and then it suddenly clicked.

Just what geological period both the POD and they had picked.

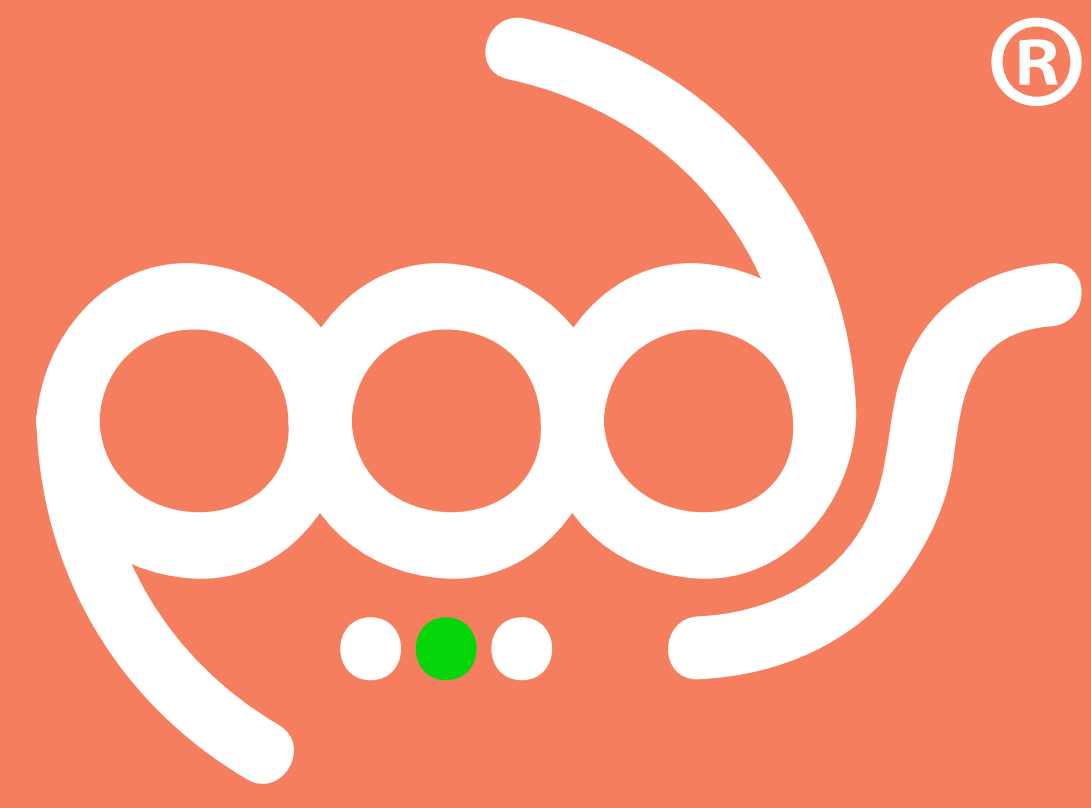

“We’ve gone back in time to the Jurassic age, oh my what fun.”

“Let’s go explore all the species of dinosaur since time has begun.”

Viewing out over the rolling plains they see a family of Iguanodon.

“Basking in lots of luscious vegetation, there’s so much to feed on.”
