The most important part of any presentation is to connect with the people you are presenting to. This is true for almost every public speaking that you will do throughout your academic career and professional career. Your audience will want to feel your enthusiasm so make sure you let it show.

When presenting, you need to make a positive first impression. You can do essay writing while keeping this point in mind. The first few minutes of your presentation need to be dedicated to making a first impression. If you fail at this, then there is a high chance the audience will not remember your presentation at all.

Making eye contact is crucial for any presentation. Some people think that this is a simple task, but they still do fail in maintaining eye contact throughout the presentation. The purpose of making eye contact and maintaining a happy face during the presentation is to help build a rapport with the audience. This will also help in calming your nerves as well.

An outstanding presentation is not boring. Just reading from the slides is not a proper way to give a presentation. Remember for your presentation to be unique, you need to be entertaining and must engage with the audience as well. You can do this by holding a question and answer session or even asking the opinions of the audience.

Body language is also an effective tool when presenting. If you deliver your presentation without moving any part of your body, it would give the impression that you are a robot. Gestures can help you in clarifying a point. Effective use of body language leaves a lasting impression on the audience and can make you stand out among your peers.

It is essential you remain as professional as ever when delivering your presentation. You should maintain a formal tone throughout, but you can throw a little bit of informality into your speech. Use styling options on your slides. We cannot stress this enough, but you must use a theme or a splash of color on your slides. Without color, they will look boring and plain and we will not stand out among the other presenters.

Use slides that are not too distracting. Remember to include information in your slides that you will further elaborate on in your presentation.

Use images and videos to strengthen the message of your presentation. Images and videos help convey the message to your audience in an effective way

Be careful not to include images that contradict or have no relation to your topic. Imagine you are giving a presentation on penguins and the image you use is of a Ferrari sports car. This will leave the audience confused so do not try that

Use the notes portion of PowerPoint. Before you ask, 'Are these the same notes I used to write my essay?'. No, they are not. These notes are a way for you to remember what you are going to say about a specific point. Notes can be extremely useful in a PowerPoint presentation so use them well

Use contrasting colors when you design your slide. This means using a dark font color over a lighter background-color

Use transitions in your slides but please do not overdo them. You can even ask write paper for me service to make the content of your presentation. The audience does not want flashy transitions which will distract them from the topic of the presentation.

When designing slides, do not put a lot of information on them. Save the bulk of the information for the speaking portion of the presentation. The fewer words there are on the screen, the more visible the information will be to the audience

Animations and sound effects need to be limited in a presentation. We do not want the presentation to be too cute
