Questions About Value/Depth

How do dark blue eyes influence my color type depth with light hair and skin since they are such a small feature?

- Her eyes are grey-blue and her hair is a blend of light to medium. She should choose medium.
- Light = delicate

Hair around forehead is much lighter (light warm gray) than hair on sides and back (medium ash brown). Does only the front part count?

Are blue eyes always considered light?

Questions About Undertones

Should your foundation warmth/coolness match your undertones? Why/why not?

If you are cool or warm, can you dip into the opposite...if so..why?

Can you be warm with cool eyes? If you tan are you then warm.

If you have silver grey hair and deep blue/green eyes are you automatically cool?

- No. I saw her photo and her hair looks like a dove gray and her skin looks warm. Previously red hair?

Can you be warm if you feel off when wearing the warmer part of the color wheel - tomato red, orange, rust, marigold, any shade of yellow, warm olive or avocado green?

I know you don't believe in there being true neutrals, but I'm really struggling to get a consensus on my undertone. I'm wondering: What do you do if experts, friends, and strangers alike all have mixed opinions on whether you're warm or cool? Is this all just a lighting problem?

Why some bright colors are too bright sometimes? Is there a between?

Signature Colors

I'm finding it difficult to plan a work wardrobe that is professional and toned-down for the office when I know that most of my best colors should be light and bright, ie. pastels... Note that I already struggle to project age and masculinity and this definitely has an impact on my career. Should I avoid my blushing/romantic colors? Can neutrals be "light and bright" enough? What happens for light and bright folks in the wintertime in the cold north?? Looking forward to this!

“Jen’s live call on levels and how to determine them as well as some redhead specific things was so informative and helpful!”

“The bonus call on levels was GREAT! The more I learn in YCS, the more I enjoy colors and feel confident in my color choices!”

“I find the more I learn, the easier it is to let go of some of the things I had resisted letting go from pre-YCS.”
