MAKING A MUSLIN & NOTES ON FIT

- It is always a good idea to make a muslin, particularly for more fitted styles. To get the most accurate results when testing the garment, it's important to do so while wearing the bra you intend to wear with the dress. If you are not planning on wearing a bra (ie. with the backless bodice), test the fit while braless, since you may discover the bust apex (or fullest part of the bodice bust) needs to be lowered to account for the absence of bra/underwire lift. Directions for lowering the bust apex can be found in our fitting ebook.
- We did not intend for the vertical princess seams of the Fiona bodice to align with the vertical apex of the bust; they have been intentionally shifted to align with the edge of the pocket. If you want to move the seams away from or towards center front, see our ebook for guidance.
- Since there is zero ease through the bust, we suggest installing at least 5 buttons along the bodice to prevent gaping. Other simple solutions for a gaping bust that you may make to the pattern are horizontal buttonholes (to provide a touch more ease), or by extending the under button band by a half inch to create more coverage. You may also sew the button band closed and insert an invisible zipper along the side seam.
- This pattern was drafted for someone with an average height of 5'-6". If you are much taller or shorter, or have had to lengthen or shorten patterns in the past, please make a muslin and the appropriate adjustments to your pattern before cutting out your fabric.
