

About BioSignatures

Nature holds many secrets that are yet to be revealed. For example, research has shown that all patterns on the surface of plants, animals, insects and other living systems are related to the peripheral energy flow on the surface of the body, which usually interacts with the environment to adapt the central energy system to external changes.

BioSignatures are linear diagrams that directly balance the energy of body organs and their functions.

BioSignatures are to be distinguished from any form of symbolism because it is a design language that is based on the energy language of nature. BioSignature Shapes are functional like integrated circuits on computer chips and are not dependent on belief or skepticism.

In BioGeometry, we understand that energy qualities of sound, colour, and angles (components of shape) are interchangeable and that there is resonance between similar colours, shapes, and motion. This allows us to use BioSignatures to discover new dimensions in the energy patterns of the functions of organs.

The body has a central energy system and several peripheral energy systems superimposed. The fat on the skin is an energy storage layer that protects the main energy from external factors. It also can accumulate and store information.

We must have windows to bring information to the internal system, but their role is much more important; they are the body's sensors of the outside environment. The peripheral energy systems include several superimposed levels, which exchange information between the inside and outside of the body.

We have a vitality energy periphery, an emotional energy periphery, and mental energy periphery, and each one includes its own sub-levels.

Similar shapes inside the body enter into resonance with each other. These relationships are on multiple levels and are expressed as linear energy patterns of organ functions that we call BioSignatures.

Suppose we put a simple shape into this information exchange layer around the physical body. In that case, we will get resonance with the corresponding energy pattern of any similar form inside the body with the exact geometric configuration.

If we look at an organ, it can have ten functions, which means that there are ten patterns of motion of energy inside it that are superimposed. Each pattern takes a particular shape because it performs a different function, and all these patterns interact together to form an energy grid.

While the shape will still be related to the primary form, it will be more related to the internal energy patterns of shape within the organ. To conduct energy, it must be linear in design. All these patterns interact together at the end and form an energy grid. So, instead of entering resonance with only the primary shape, we go directly to each energy pattern. This process can be applied to minor details, even the DNA level.

The BioSignatures conduct energy into their linear shapes when placed within the body's periphery. This forms an energy pattern of the same shape that resonates with the corresponding body function. If the BioSignature produces the correct pattern, it will enter resonance and amplify the energy of that corresponding organ function. On an energy level, this could instantly correct the energy flow and balance the organs.

BioSignatures produce energy balance of the organ function, which supports other forms of orthodox medical treatments or alternative remedies. Sometimes the body can have its own healing, which is instantaneous.

This should not, however, delude us into thinking that this is a form of alternative medical treatment. It is still a form of energy balance, closer to an environmental 'tuning' activity that supports health. It is rather like tuning a musical instrument.

To properly balance the energy of an area to promote the healing process, we must know all types of energy flows in the body, as found in Chinese acupuncture meridians, the Indian Chakra energy system, and other forms of alternative energy healing.

If we already have experience in healing, we can use any system to evaluate the energy balance and pick up what is needed.

Sometimes we find that the person needs BioSignatures that seem unrelated to his complaints because of an undetected problem in the organ function, which could be on the energy level and not yet physically manifested.

The resonance of organ shapes or organ details could be another reason. Based on similar shapes, the ear and kidney, for example, have resonance between the organs.

The Energy That Flows Through The BioSignatures Comes From The Body's Own Energy. This energy flows through the linear shape of the BioSignatures automatically when any linear object is put in an energy field from which it will conduct the energy.

Like computer technology, when activated by an electric current, BioSignatures directly balance the energy of the body's organs and their functions.

