DrySee waterproof bandages provide a secure, waterproof covering for low-exudate wounds, including those inflicted upon golf course employees, who are often exposed to chemicals and murky water throughout the workday; as a result, any cuts or open wounds can be at increased risk for infection. A regular bandage does little to protect wounds from exposure, the company says, and it is hard to tell if most waterproof bandages are working. The company says unlike typical waterproof bandages that leave wearers wondering if the seal is working, bandages from DrySee (a medical technology company dedicated to improving wound care) have a color-changing feature. If the seal of the bandage fails, the outer ring of gauze on DrySee bandages will turn blue, indicating it needs to be changed. DrySee bandages can last for up to three days. DrySee bandages are available in packages of 25 or four units for online purchase. DrySee liquid-indicating bandages are waterproof, sterile, disposable, breathable and nonlatex. Target Specialty Products, a provider of turf and ornamental landscaping solutions in the U.S. and Canada, has received CFIA registration for Turf Fuel Infinite, which the company calls an unprecedented product for turf professionals designed to improve moisture management and stress tolerance. The company says Turf Fuel Infinite is unique in the way it combines Diuturon, a patent-pending surfactant; Templar, a plant-stress technology; and four other companion polymers. The system enables turf managers to take control of soil hydration and plant health like never before. "Since launching Infinite two years ago in the U.S., our customers have realized game-changing benefits to not only their water management, but also improvements to plant fitness as well as control over playability. I can't wait to share this valuable tool with our Canadian customers," says Mark Jull, Target Specialty Products western North America golf sales manager and former manager of Proprietary Products. Diuturon and Templar have produced exceptional results in the company's testing at the University of Arkansas and University of Massachusetts over the last six years, according to the company.
