I Can't Save You And Don't Want To Die Trying: American Fire Culture

by Dr. Burton A. Clark, EFO

About the book...

The author wants readers to understand, "Society needs to change how it thinks and feels about fire death. When a civilian is killed by fire it is not an act of God, and when a firefighter is killed it is not part of the job. When there is a fire death something went wrong. We must change to an Automatic Fire Protection Culture in the 21st century."

I Can't Save You And Don't Want to Die Trying: American Fire Culture is a road map that social, political, economic, and technological stake holders can use to reduce the loss of life and property from fire. From the fire house to the state house, from the boardroom to the living room we can all do better to prevent and survive fire.

The author strongly believes this book is very much in keeping with Dr. Lori Moore-Merrell, the new head of the U.S. Fire Administration, strategies to address firefighter shortages and safety; and the need to better educate citizens, public administrators and elected officials to the many fire related issues affecting our country today.

About the author...

Dr. Burton A. Clark, EFO has spent over 50 years in the fire service and is still serving. He's worked at the local, county, state, national, and international levels. He has protected the President of the United States in the White House and his neighbors in their farmhouses. He taught kindergartners to Stop, Drop & Roll and doctoral students how to enhance their research skills in preparation for their dissertations. He has published more than two hundred articles and lectured around the world and counseled with business leaders in insurance, fire suppression, and equipment manufacturers.
