It is important to understand the type of academic writing, its requirements, instructions and other basic things before writing.

This article will contain all the essential details regarding how to write a detailed summary of an article. First of all, you should understand what the summary is and why you have to write it.

What is a summary?

A summary is a type of academic writing that requires you to read an article and jot down all of its main points in a document. A summary should be easy to read and must contain all the important points discussed in the original article. You should make sure to add the main idea of the article clearly and concisely.

A summary should depict your unique style of writing, summarize a lot of information in fewer words. You need to identify the details that support the main ideas in the article. You have to ensure that you write the summary in your own words. Some students copy and paste sentences from the articles, which results in deduction of marks, or academic warnings.

How to write a summary?

There are three steps involved in writing a summary of an article:

Identify the main idea of the article

You have to read the article and highlight the main idea discussed by the author. You need to find the main objective and the main idea of the article because the entire article usually revolves around a single idea.

Important arguments of the article

You should find the thesis statement of the article and identify the arguments presented in the article. You can further read the details in the body paragraphs in order to write about the arguments presented in the article, which back the thesis statement.

Start writing your summary

Once you have read the entire article and jotted down the rough points, now is the time to start writing your summary. You should start with an introduction containing the idea being discussed in the article. Then, your thesis statement is followed by the three body paragraphs and then a well-structured conclusion paragraph.
