TELEVISION

Innocence Project

Five boys. Two trials. One case that continues to shock the world. Most people remember the story of the Central Park Five, but Ava DuVernay's new four-part Netflix miniseries, When They See Us (premiering May 31), attempts to tell the story from the perspective of the young men who were wrongly convicted of rape. (Joshua Jackson, John Leguizamo and Vera Farmiga star.) The 1989 Central Park jogger proceedings took the world by storm, and the racial overtones made it one of the most widely publicized crimes of the 1980s.

CHANGING VIEWPOINTS "When they see us, too often we're feared," Blair Underwood (who plays defense attorney Bobby Burns) tells Us about the title's double meaning. "When they see us in a film such as this, you will see us for who we are."

FINDING PURE JOY

Landing a role on a show you love doesn't happen often — so Alyson Hannigan jumped at the chance to join season 2 of WGN's Pure (May 28, 10 P.M.). "I haven't been [so] hooked on a show since Breaking Bad," says Aly. The character is "sassier" than the actress, 45, is used to, but she learned to adapt when she was a kid, thanks to Buffy boss Joss Whedon: "Buffy was my college. It was fantastic. I couldn't have asked for better training!"
