Thoughts from the artist, Alan Pedersen.

“Light works in wondrous ways. Only when it breaks does it show its colours, revealing the hues of the surroundings between the source and the observer. It paints the sky, reflects in water, and is essential for life. Humans have always been fascinated by sunset and sunrise. The break of dawn offers hope for something better, while sunsets provide a time for reflection and wonder.

This painting came quite easily to me, although it took time to achieve the desired outcome. It needed to capture the conflicted feelings regarding light—amazement and introspection as we watch the last light of day. When the final sun rays cross the horizon, the landscape or room dims, leaving behind colder temperatures and darkness. The same occurs at dawn when the first light appears. During Scandinavian summers, it happens early, and for some, the night hasn’t even stopped. But you witness how the surroundings awaken and smell the fresh morning dew. It instils a sense of hope and new adventures. The light will always break through at some point—the light of life and hope.” says Alan and continuous:

“I drew inspiration for my colour combinations from this aspect and from the wonderful nature. The green and blue shapes with the almost fiery red sun complement and contrast each other so well. The sun rays breaking through the dark and lush pine trees create a captivating scene. I hope the observer finds it both interesting and pleasant, sparking conversations with themselves or others.”

The creation process

Crafted with water-based acrylic paint, incorporating bright, warm neon colours, and detailed lines to enhance depth and richness. This remarkable original painting truly comes to life and captures wonder. The outstanding color combination contributes to its story and elegance. The delicately painted frame is an integral part of the artwork, adding the final touch to Alan's vision and emphasizing its artistic purpose. Therefore, it is sold as one art piece.

The artist, Alan Pedersen – Alantherock. Danish artist from Copenhagen.

"When life is sweet, say thank you and celebrate. And when life is bitter, say thank you and grow" - Shauna Niequist.

Usually, Alan Pedersen doesn't rely on quotations when he tries to make sense of life. However, this precise quotation reflects and plays a crucial role in how he has chosen to handle the punches that life has thrown at him over the years. It is how he has taught himself to view hard times as opportunities to learn, develop, and transform adversity into something constructive. Life hasn't always been kind. It has dealt him some heavy blows. He lost his father when he was 11 years old, and his mother passed away about 10 years ago, leaving Alan with very limited biological family and no siblings. Instead of letting darkness and loss dominate, Alan turned his grief into a reminder that life must be lived now. 'I'm not afraid of death; I'm afraid not to live my life,' as he describes it.

"I remember that my mother had plenty of things she wanted to do but never did. I think my greatest fear is to be sitting as an 80-year-old man knowing that I didn't follow my dreams. Time is the least available resource we have, and suddenly it may be too late. I think the loss of my parents constantly reminds me that it's better to act today than to wait until tomorrow," says Alan.
