Spearheading transit for livable cities at 93

I can't wait until my friends move back home, and we can finally go on all those adventures we had planned for when we were kids. It's going to be so much fun to relive those memories and make new ones together. However, I do worry about how we'll get around, considering the distance we'll need to travel between our homes. Do you have any ideas on how we can make the trip more enjoyable and less stressful?
