At times, my good dreams feel so real that I never want to wake up. I am surrounded by love as I float above my bed amongst amorphous colours that hold me in a soft hum of static warmth. I watch them take shape and they skip across my skin like electric currents or sunbeams. The muted chime of bells ripples across the folds of my brain and slips out through my ears in tiny bubbles. Flowers bloom inside my head, I can feel their silky petals caressing my skull as they curl outwards from the buds. The flowers radiate neon light and explode in a sweet pop when fully blossomed. Popcorn flowers. These days that my dreams are more real than my waking life can be quite pleasant. I won't bother you with the nightmares.
