Winemaker's notes

Following a number of years that could easily be described as out of the ordinary in one way or another, the 2019 harvest brought us back to a much more predictable, and typical, Paso Robles vintage with harvest starting in September instead of August. A colder winter, a mild spring and minimal heat spikes during the summer months delayed harvest and gave the il Campo Bianco plenty of flavor while still maintaining its fresh acidity. These grapes were crushed, destemmed, and soaked on their skins for a few hours. Small-basket pressed into stainless steel, and fermented naturally.

Tasting notes

Orange blossom, citrus oil and apricot highlight the aromatics while pear, minerals and ginger frame the bright and refreshing palate. It's known around here as Stephy's "porch pounder."

Vineyard notes

Castoro Jack Knife Vineyard (Falanghina), Paso Robles Estrella District AVA

Soils are of the Nacimiento-Los Osos complex. Mountainous -- almost a 50% slope facing North-East. Elevation is 1200 feet (roughly). Soils are a silty clay loam and are well-drained. The temperature drops to the 50's each night and gets up to mid-90's. The vines run E-W to avoid the hot afternoon temperatures. These own-rooted vines are organically farmed (though not yet certified).
