

RENO CAROLLO

SCULPTOR • JEWELER • ARTIST

Making art is a process of exploring myself through materials, processes and statements. It is a very self-indulging act and I love the time for me to learn and challenge my understanding of the world around me. I am addicted to the process of making! Be it a ring, a sculpture or a painting, I love participating in the act of making something. The one-word descriptor I use to describe myself is “Maker”. Art is in the making; it’s how I see the world. It’s the visual stimulation that enters my brain and gets interpreted, dissected and reconfigured in my form.

To me, that is what making is about. Be that form in a jewelry piece, a sculpture or a painting, it is what art making is. The exploration of what surrounds me and what I choose to add or not add is what makes my art.

In our information age, with all the technology moving faster and faster, and invention outpacing our current grasp, I find it exhilarating being alive and able to explore and create in this time period. It is my joy to share my interpretation of our world through my art. ”
