FABERGE EGG

The rose guilloche enamel with rose cut diamonds decorated to Russian Imperial Design in hinged top to display a nephrite hand carved elephant . Height; 4.50 inches .Original box

Sold $40,000

Note: The first Fabergé Egg was created in 1885 Michael Perchin (1860-1903), and while the design was perfected two years later, the original design faced difficulties with the rounded enamel and the four gold colours used for the swags of flowers. The pristine borders bear the neo-Rococo hallmark of Fabergé in their later production, a preferred design in cosmopolitan St. Petersburg and Paris during the 1880's and early 1890's. Upon his deathbed in 1903, Perchin left the workshop to Henrik Immanuel Wigström (1862-1923), a journeyman who eventually became his protege. Wigström, now in control, oversaw the creation of the famous Russian Imperial Easter Eggs from 1904 to 1917. Many of the trademark stone animals, figurines, and flowers found on the enamel eggs were composed under Wigström's tutelage, and his son Henrik Wilhelm Wigström also became part of the Fabergé dynasty. By 1917, however, the Russian Revolution stalled the production of luxury goods due to continued social taboos stemming from Communism, and forced both Wigströms to abandon their practice and settle in the Finnish countryside. This limited window of production, as well as the delicate beauty of these pieces, have skyrocketed Fabergé eggs to the peak of the luxury Decorative Arts market.
