Alex Sutcliffe

My work uses painterly modes to address a number of contemporary topics, mainly the ways in which gestures, swipes, touch, smudges and fingerprints enter into the vernacular of pictures. Enlisting a variety of means, including printers, scanners, 3D modelling programs, found images, and paint, I exchange aspects of both traditional and digital painting to engage a conversation with contemporary image making. Through this process, artifacts and limitations of physical and digital images are revealed.

Rationing Time, Data, & Paint

of works by emerging Canadian artists and friends Atticus Gordon and Alex Sutcliffe. This exhibition explores the use of digital collage in a painterly context. What does it mean to arrest a digital format in material form? How can symbolism and imagination intersect within the material qualities of paint? Driven by a love for painting and boasting an array of painterly styles, this exhibition explores these questions and more.
