The East Coast Series

Guillermo Trejo

May 6 — July 2, 2022

I find that my approach to image making is defined by the process of printmaking; a consequence of the many years working with and teaching the medium. I contemplate that my process is not only a means for individual creation, but rather a collaborative endeavor. My collaborator, in this case, is a machine— the printing press. After years of operating the press I have gained mastery over and understand how it behaves. The results of a print depends on the behaviour of the press. From the dimensions of the print to the tonal quality of the inks, the press impacts the creative process. So why not think of this process as a collaboration?

For this series, I worked only with materials found in the print studio: old inks, old plates, and the legendary oversized press of Saint Michael's Print Studio. As I worked, I realized I was engaging with improvisation similar to the jazz compositions I was listening to. My studio jamming produced images that evolved organically without set plans or rules, just responses to my materials and recorded by the press.

The East Coast Series, produced at the Saint Michael's Print Studio in St. John's, NL, responds to my previous series, the West Coast Series produced in Vancouver, BC. Their parallel titles are based on the idea of a jazz ensemble and improvisation.
