Exhibition Catalogue

Here's a Place to Start

Andrew Morrow

studio sixtysix

contemporary art gallery

Studio Sixty Six believes in building meaningful relationships through art with collectors and creators.

Founded in 2013, we are a contemporary art gallery that represents a carefully selected group of acclaimed Canadian artists. Through our professional expertise, exemplary service, and hands-on curation we strive to build our artists' careers and our clients' collections.

We work with you! We welcome all queries about our artists and buying their work. Whether you're a seasoned collector or a first-time art buyer, we make the daunting selection process an exciting and pleasurable journey to curate art into your life.

Andrew Morrow

Andrew Morrow is a contemporary Canadian artist living in Chelsea, QC, Canada. His current practice exists at the intersection of relationality and art, motivated by a desire for connection, community, and wellness. Recent works combine personal and lived experience with multiple collaborative processes. Grounded in an ongoing commitment to materially-based figurative painting, Morrow's practice includes small and large-scale drawings, paintings, and sometimes, installations.

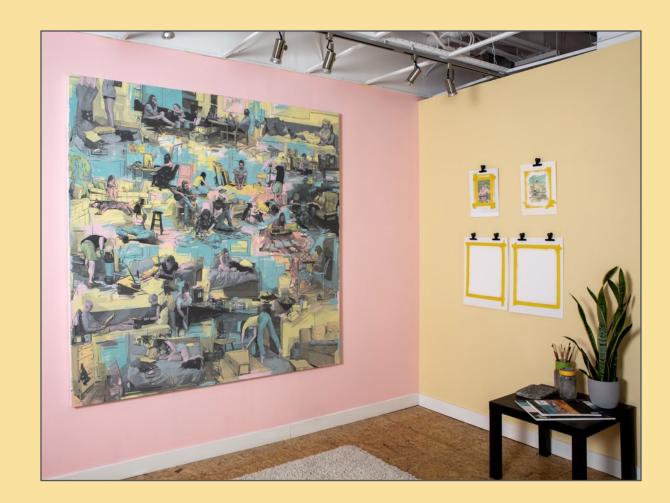

Being Together in Time: Andrew Morrow Finds the Painting

by Sky Goodden, Publisher and Editor, MOMUS October 22, 2021

> We know ourselves as part and as crowd, in an unknown that does not terrify. We cry our cry of poetry. Our boats are open, and we sail them for everyone.

Édouard Glissant, Poetics of Relation

Before I sat down to look at Andrew Morrow's paintings and write this text, I couldn't tell you what I was doing. I was conscious, but in the way we all are, at home, moving in a sort of half-waking flow. I believe my cat swished around my ankles as I stood in the kitchen, waiting for toast? (A lucky guess.) I might have moved to the piano in an act of procrastination that is typically un-volunteered? The days pass like this, without much sense of conscious punctuation.

We have spent the past twenty months shorn of the casual witness: the anonymously-known but intimately-felt presence of the peripheral observer. Your fish monger can serve as this; your local variety-store owner; the Italian neighbour whose name you still don't know, but you trade in tomatoes and plums. We have read about how much these relationships affect us, and how much their absence can be measured in our own diminished sense of ourselves, in this time. And conscious or not, we have likely noticed it.

Andrew Morrow – who would really rather this text not be about Covid, and I get that completely – has done something remarkable in the time of Covid. (Sorry, Andrew. I'll keep this tight.) The casual witness he has brought to his 'sitters', who are largely unknown to him, manifests a shared relationality – that quiet, observational exchange – that so many of us have been missing.

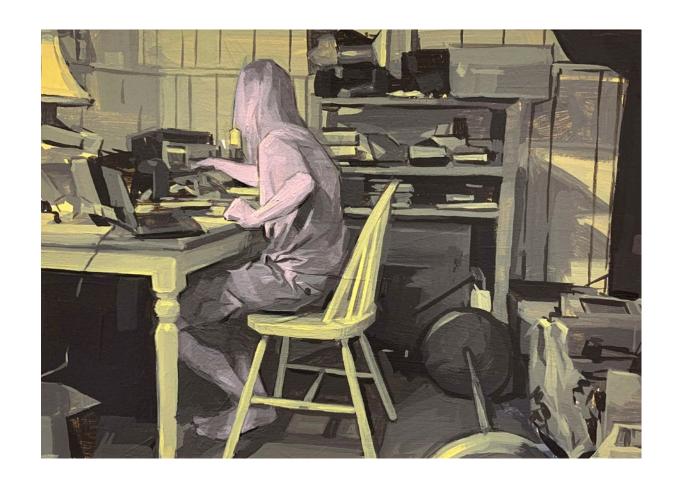

It reminds me of the French writer, poet, and philosopher Édouard Glissant, who famously put his attention to the "common-place," or what he termed "source reality," as a font for the imaginary. Morrow made similar grist of a fallow mill. Beginning with a call-out on Instagram, he brought strangers together for "studio sessions" where they were invited to live their lives near their screens – eating dinner, watching a movie, playing guitar, reading, petting the dog (there is much loving attention paid to our loving animals) – as Morrow painted them in space. Having only worked occasionally from live models before, these new challenges also introduced new invitations. Within a sitting there is the requirement to get the image down more quickly, Morrow told me, moving through the value and tones of his drawings faster, and then deepening and arranging the various sitter "satellites" back in his studio. And you can see it: the paintings vibrate with their own gestural making, a loose but alert confidence in hand; art possessing the same life it discerns.

Glissant's ideal poet is a real-time "builder" of a grammar and syntax, and while this attention to construction can produce an ultimate langue, it's the act of building that received the crucial status. He emphasized the "poet writing" over the "poet thinking."

Morrow has moved his hand through a time of stillness, and forged passive connection with strangers in a period of isolation. (He's ambivalent about whether the paintings are the trace to the event, or the event themselves.) A redistribution of significance, either way, is always interesting. And the paintings remain an essentializing principle – without them, these are just people hanging out on Zoom, after all, one party observing another that pretends not to notice. But the process of their coming into being, bringing people together for passive friendship, for peripheral attention, for quiet connection ... the work contains the social doing that contains their pulse.

Inviting variety and chance encounter into the space of painting (an activity typically single-authored and often, even ideally, isolated), Morrow also sourced the "commonplace" at home. Putting to work leftover latex paint from his children's bedrooms, he patches over pewter-grey tracks that signal joint, gesture, and foundation, and shifts in daisy yellow, streaks of Carolina blue, shimmers of blush and coral pink, all interchangeable and overlapping. The palette suggests an interior universe whose whorls of energy, like dust motes soughing in the kitchen light, cohere us around even our dullest, most puttering activities. They swirl out of open windows and across alleyways, a ripple of buttery yellow ribboning around a woman's arms as she pulls up her hair; surfacing across another's couch, as she regards her cat. Legs go tucked beneath a writer at her kitchen table, a blue waving calmly by and through to help sustain a day's diminishing light. From pink-faced dawn to sun-drawn afternoon to the inevitable, inner-lit and navy night, Morrow's Brueghel-like mélange of joyful, contemplative, searching scenes - altogether distinct to this time of isolation (sorry, again, Andrew) but also eternal - continue to reflect back on their making. "All these people supporting my practice; it's not me," Morrow says; "it's not the painter alone in his studio making their work. There's this network sustaining it, which feels very, very different." He takes a moment more, to reflect. "My job is to find the painting."

A calibrated two-dimensional plot (Owen) Andrew Morrow

Acrylic on prepared cotton paper 9.5 x 7 in. / 24 x 18 cm
Custom framed 2021

Which I love (Kimana and Nic) Andrew Morrow

Latex paint on prepared cotton paper 9.5 x 7 in. / 24 x 18 cm
Custom framed 2021

Latex paint on canvas 18 x 18 in. / 46 x 46 cm Unframed 2021

Or to tomorrow (Peter) Andrew Morrow

Acrylic on prepared cotton paper 7 x 5.5 in. / 18 x 14 cm
Custom framed 2021

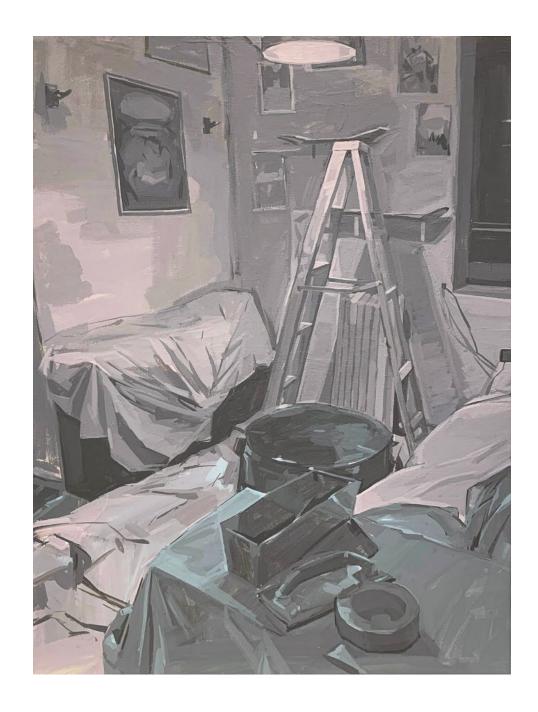

Breakfast, lunch, or dinner (Sheila and Tom) Andrew Morrow

Acrylic on prepared cotton paper 7.5 x 7 in. / 19 x 18 cm
Custom framed 2021

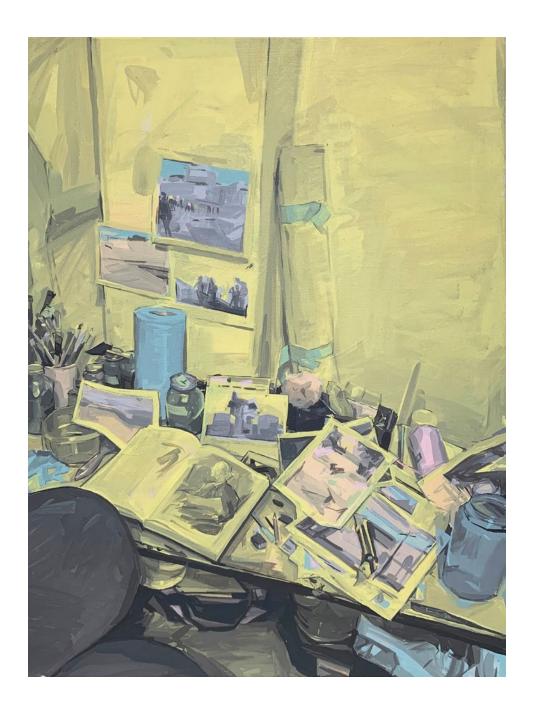

*I'm sure my cats would join too (Emily)*Andrew Morrow

Acrylic on canvas 18 x 24 in. / 46 x 61 cm Unframed 2021

Spread the good word (Cam's living room) Andrew Morrow

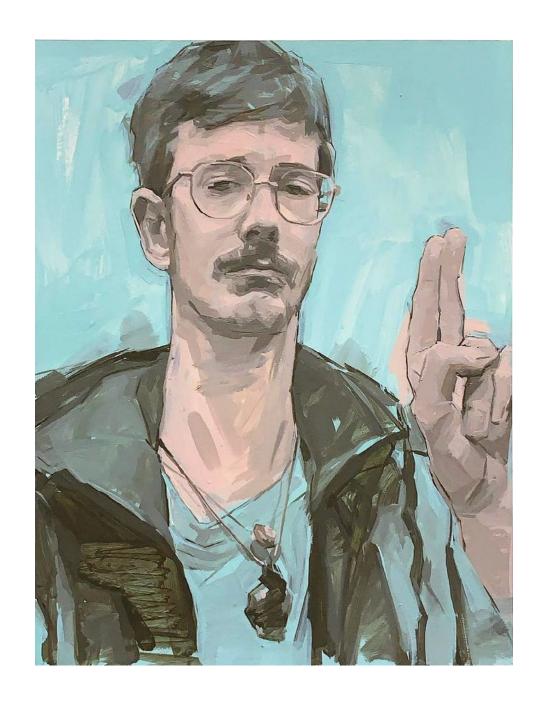

Latex paint on canvas 24 x 18 in. / 61 x 46 cm Unframed 2021

Finished before it is (Nic's studio) Andrew Morrow

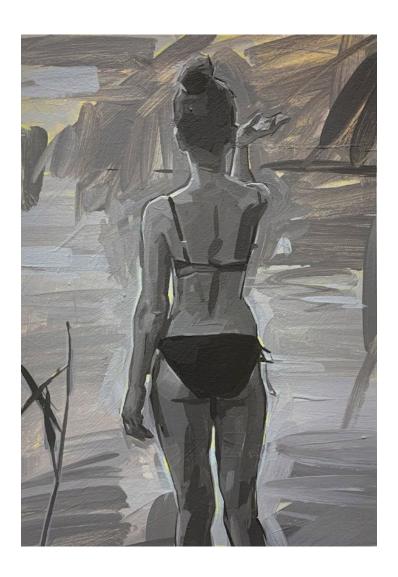

Acrylic on canvas 24 x 18 in. / 61 x 46 cm Unframed 2021

You caught me mid spread (Paul) Andrew Morrow

Latex paint on prepared cotton paper 14 x 11 in. / 36 x 28 cm
Custom framed 2021

Just cooling our feet (Meagan) Andrew Morrow

Acrylic on prepared cotton paper 9.5 x 7 in. / 24 x 18 cm
Custom framed 2021

Latex paint on prepared cotton paper 14 x 11 in. / 36 x 28 cm
Custom framed 2021

Neither Brightly Lit Nor Completely EnlightenedAndrew Morrow

Latex and acrylic paints on canvas 72 x 72 in. / 183 x 183 cm Unframed 2021

Suite 101, 858 Bank Street Ottawa, Ontario K1S 3W3 gallery: (613) 800—1641 mobile: (613) 355—0359 info@studiosixtysix.ca studiosixtysix.ca

