The Washington Park Arboretum is Sam's favorite place in the city, and we see her reflecting on her past with Jake during a walk there. Covering 230 acres, the garden provide an incredible oasis in the bustling city and is one of the crown jewels of the Emerald City.

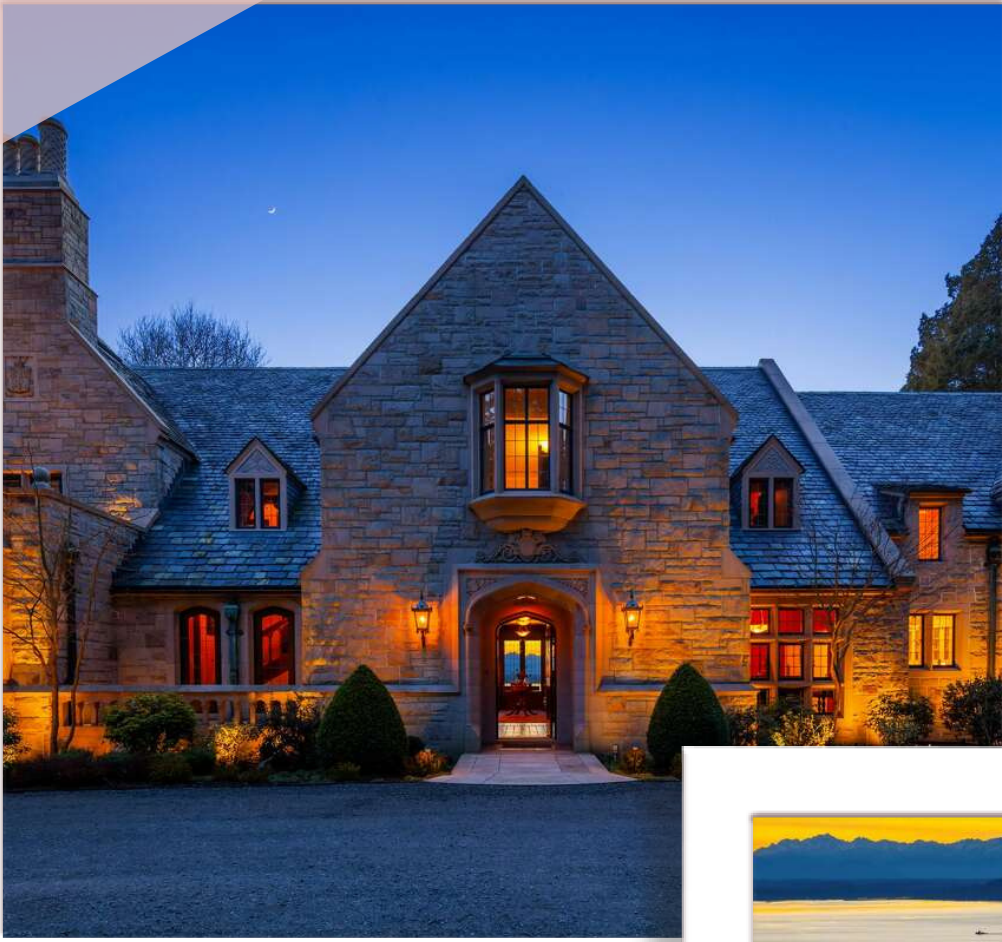

While Pike Place is definitely a major tourist spot and is deluged by cruise ship passengers in the summer, the market is also beloved by Seattle locals who go there to peruse the fish, flowers, and crafts. Matt's on the Market, where Sai and Sam eventually reunite, has delicious seafood and a great view of the market.

Demetri's
Woodstone Tavern

This Edmonds standby has been around for more than thirty years and its waterfront location and cozy ambiance are the inspiration for Breaker's, the regular watering hole where Anna and her friends meet up to gossip, drink wine, and occasionally send very regrettable emails.

Alder Cove was inspired by Woodway, WA

On the south side of Edmonds, sits the neighborhood of Woodway, a small enclave with some of the dreamiest dream houses in the area. It's minutes away from downtown Edmonds, but feels completely quiet and secluded with a landscape shrouded by massive fir trees. The properties with a water view—like Jake's—offer some of the most stunning views of Puget Sound and the Olympic Mountains in the region.

The quaint but lively Main Street where Sam's studio is located is inspired by Edmonds' own Main Street, which features a variety of locally-owned businesses including restaurants, boutiques, art galleries, wine bars, and yes, even a couple of yoga studios! Main Street also features a real-life tree lighting each year like the one where we see our characters cross paths in the book.
