Preface: Why now | ix

Dedication | xvii

1. Accidental citizens: Solidarity won't come from homogeneity but from respect for diversity | 1
2. Justice and equality: There's more to handling race and religion than avoiding riots | 8
3. The power of symbols: The 2017 Presidential Election was a missed opportunity for nation building | 15
4. 391 Orchard Road: In a xenophobic climate, a commercial address became an unlikely object of national pride | 22
5. Morality police: Conservative values have a place, but they shouldn't restrict consenting adults' cultural choices | 29
6. Infamous Amos: Amos Yee's extreme provocation was wrong, but that doesn't make the law right | 36
7. Demophobic society: Singapore's allergic reaction to the D-word gets in the way of strengthening its system | 43
8. From 2011 to 2015: The Workers' Party woke up a sleeping giant, to its cost | 50
9. Winter is here: Since the 2011 general election, a chill has descended on political debate | 57
10. Freak elections: Elites consistently underestimate the sophistication of the Singapore electorate | 64
11. Open government: People are overpoliticising the Presidency for want of democratic institutions | 71
12. 6.9 million: The government's Population White Paper was a worrying symptom of a lack of internal debate | 78

13. The fog of fear: If we're not pretending to be a liberal democracy, let's be upfront about political limits | 85
14. Elite cohesion: The Lee family feud was an exception that proved the rule of extraordinary establishment unity | 92
15. Disturbing the peace: Many Singaporeans have peculiarly low tolerance for perceived troublemakers | 99
16. Political sweet spot: Singapore's lack of protest activity is the result of an extraordinary balancing act | 106
17. Calibrated coercion: The government's strategic restraint in the use of violence is one of its most under-rated skills | 113
18. Freedom of speech: There's a happy medium between dictatorship and anarchy, and we're not there yet | 120
19. Dreaded defamation: It's time to rethink the use of Singapore's most chilling speech law | 127
20. Holding the press: The national news media are free to earn profits, but not the people's affection | 134
21. The digital gap: Anti-government memes don't make up for the lack of independent online journalism | 141
22. Academic interests: Our universities have arrived on the global stage but left the local behind | 148
23. Reputational risk: At NTU, I got an unwanted lesson in how the Singapore system deals with perceived opponents | 155
24. Active citizens: Civil society activism includes voices of conscience that Singapore should not silence | 162
25. The Lee legacy: Lee Kuan Yew made some blunders, but he's not to blame for Singapore's inability to let go of him | 169
26. A PAP wishlist: I can imagine becoming a fan of the People's Action Party if its leaders can imagine certain reforms | 176
27. Reforming the PAP: A fifth generation leadership will need to make changes that their predecessors have resisted | 183
28. Accidental losers: Singapore's intolerance of political differences is rooted in a distorted picture of the past | 190
