

"Completely brilliant. I wish I were young again with these by my side. It's like being in a room with marvellous tutors. You can't really afford to be without them, and they are a joy to read."

Joanna Lumley

Edited by Jolyon Connell, the founder of the highly successful current affairs magazine The Week, our literary guides are quite different from any other educational guides on the market. They are written by leading academics who have spent years studying the novels, plays and poems they cover. Drawing on the most interesting critics past and present, they show how differently great texts can be interpreted and how opinions about them change over time. Concise, lively and accessible, Connell Guides give students the chance to benefit from the kind of expertise and knowledge usually only found in top academic circles.

Like the English ones, our new History guides are being written by leading academics with years of experience in their specialist areas and draw on the views of other leading historians past and present. As with the English series, there will be two types of guide: longer ones (about 20,000 words in all) covering major areas of historical interest – and shorter ones on more specific subjects.
