Object: Leather B1

Hereby we declare that animals are not slaughtered to get leather for furniture, shoes or accessories, leather is a by-product of the food industry that would be thrown away and wasted, creating an even bigger problem for the environment .

The tanning industry is doing nothing but giving a new value to the residue from the livestock industry, using modern production techniques, safe and regulated by strict rules, this way we can say that leather is a recycled and sustainable material.

Since many years the european tanning system is very careful on the environmental impact, all the processes are subject to rules e certifications that make Europe the global leader in the sustainable transformation of this sub-product.

Anica by Effeti Gest carefully select the suppliers looking at the traceability of the entire supply chain, from the farms to the finished product to ensure that all the processes meet the quality standards and that involve the care and respect for animals firstly, keeping also an eye to the ethic transformation of the material without exploiting any actor of the production lines, this can make the difference on the processes and the breeding in other underdeveloped are
